BIBLIOGRAPHY OF LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHERS' CATALOGUES OF MUSIC FOR SALE
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First of all, I would like to thank my supervisor, Dr. Brian Pritchard for his encouragement and guidance throughout my studies. This dissertation could not have been completed without his support. I would also like to acknowledge my co-supervisor, Associate Prof. Sue Court for her contribution as a second reader and her helpful comments.

Dr. Rupert Ridgewell, Curator of Music, of the British Library, offered valuable insights regarding the format and the contents of the Bibliography of London music publishers’ catalogues, which form part II of this dissertation.

I would like to thank Mr. Peter Ward Jones, Head of the Music Section, of the Bodleian Library for bringing the existence of the card catalogues of music publishers’ sale catalogues at the Bodleian Library and the British Library to my attention on my first visit to the Bodleian Library in 2005.

I am also indebted to Mr. Richard Turbet and Ms. Michelle Gait of the University of Aberdeen Library, Aberdeen; Dr. Peter Horton, Professor Paul Banks and Mr. Michael Mullen at the Royal College of Music, London; Dr. Graham Hogg, Senior Curator of the Rare Book Collection and Ms. Almut Boehme, Head of Music, of the National Library of Scotland, Edinburgh; staff members at the British Library, the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and Cambridge University Library.

I would also like to thank Mr. Barrie Greenwood for kindly allowing me to use his index of newspaper advertisements (1801 to 1820) for this dissertation.

I would like to extend my appreciation to Education New Zealand and Farina Thompson Charitable Trust for providing the financial assistance necessary to carry out research at the British Library, and the Oxford and Cambridge University libraries.

I am grateful also to my proof-reader, Ms. Geraldine Murphy.

ABSTRACT

This study documents and analyses the music-selling and publishing industry in London from 1780 to the end of the Georgian period as reflected in publishers’ catalogues of music for sale. It assembles the histories and activities of these music publishers in relation to the society they served. Catalogues inform us quite precisely not only of the activities of music publishers, but also the role they played in accommodating, influencing, expanding and educating the contemporary musical taste. In addition, catalogues provide documentary evidence of compositions in issues no longer extant, and even of some works themselves at least by the lesser-known composers. Nearly 600 catalogues in over 1100 states, issued by over 100 London music-publishing firms from 1780 to 1837 have been gathered from the British Library, London; the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and Cambridge University Library, Cambridge.

Arguably, publishers’ catalogues are among the sharpest yet least appreciated mirrors of changes in musical taste. This study attempts to bring them into the foreground, place them in their proper historical perspective and establish their role in musicological research.

THE PERIOD OF THIS STUDY DEFINED

By themselves, the opening and closing years of this study do not mark any defining event in the history of music publishing in England. Obviously, catalogues of music had been produced before 1780 and they continued to be produced after 1837. However, in 1783 the death of Elisabeth Randall, the last direct successor to the firm of Walsh founded nearly a century earlier, finally brought to an end an epoch in music printing and publishing in England. At the same time, three music publishers who were to dominate the London music trade beyond 1800 commenced operations: John Bland in 1776, John Preston in 1774 and Robert Birchall in 1783. Their catalogues represent a first flowering of catalogue production and a flourishing of the engraving technique. A further generation of publishers, notably Samuel Chappell, George Goulding and Robert Cocks, together with J Alfred Novello, are operating from the 1820s and continue uninterrupted towards the half century. This later generation represents a second flowering of catalogue production and the dominance of the letterpress process. No change of such magnitude is to occur again, although lithography assumes an increasing importance. This generational change of publishers and this shift in the printing process, not to mention changes in musical style from classical to early Romantic, and the dominance of a single instrument (the piano) replacing the wider variety of favoured instruments in the late eighteenth century, is completed within the last half century of Hanoverian rule. The accession of Victoria to the throne in 1837 may have been a starting point for change in many aspects of social and political life in England.
INTRODUCTION

London remained the most dynamic centre for music publishing in England and the continent throughout the time-frame of this study (1780–1837). No other city equalled London in population and wealth and, arguably, London was also the most cosmopolitan city of its time. This cosmopolitan mix, reflected in London’s music scene and in the music published there, lends particular importance to this period.

The city had a constant influx of foreign musicians, as it not only welcomed foreign composers and performers from abroad but also offered lucrative opportunities. A large number of these musicians travelled to England to avoid the social, political and economic uncertainties of a continent beset by revolution and war. These émigrés boosted the repertoire of British music publishers by substantially augmenting the efforts of native composers. The business transactions between London and continental publishing houses, and between continental composers and London publishers, as well as the sheer quantity of continental music (imported or pirated) that appeared on the English market during this period further reinforce the cosmopolitan nature of the music scene in London. It seems that from the late eighteenth century, London and continental music publishers had forged well-established networks.

Catalogues of music for sale present the output of individual publishers – the numbers of publications they issued, the types of music they published – more comprehensively than any other sources. Beyond that, their sheer quantity makes them one of the richest mines of information for a study of music-publishing activity in late-eighteenth and nineteenth-century London. Yet despite recognition of the city’s flourishing music scene, the catalogues brought out by London music publishers have received little attention as a primary source of information. Writings on English music publishers and printers and music sellers have been predominantly in the form of dictionaries or directories that briefly describe individual firms but pay scant attention to their outputs.

1 For contextual reasons, reference may be made some catalogues dated prior to 1780. Those states issued after 1837, belonging to a catalogue issued prior to 1837 are included in all discussions.
Frank Kidson’s British Music Publishers, Printers and Engravers: London, Provincial, Scottish and Irish. From Queen Elizabeth’s Reign to George the Fourth, with Select Bibliographical Lists of Musical Works Printed and published within that Period (1900), is a dictionary of English music publishers and provides brief biographical histories, adding an occasional selective list of publications to some entries. The entries appear to have been somewhat randomly selected and it is now considered an unreliable source.

Humphries and Smith’s Music Publishing in the British Isles from the beginning until the middle of the nineteenth century: A Dictionary of engravers, printers, publishers and music sellers, with an historical introduction (1954, 2nd edition 1970) follows the format of Kidson’s work, but provides concise histories of a larger number of music publishing firms, more specific in chronological detail and such matters as changes of name and location. It also supplies valuable references to a considerable number of surviving catalogues. It has long been regarded as one of the most important reference tools available to researchers working in the field of the British music-publishing trade. But now, with even the second edition nearly forty years old, it could well be updated and revised. Inaccuracies have been found in dates given for terminations of business, changes of imprints, dissolutions or commencements of new partnerships as well as in some descriptions of publishers’ catalogues.

John A. Parkinson’s Victorian Music Publishers: An Annotated List (1990), a specialised dictionary of music publishers of the period 1830 to 1900, for the most part lies outside the scope of this study. Its value here lies in its inclusion of publishers whose businesses were established before 1830.

The New Grove Handbooks in Music: Music Printing and Publishing edited by D. W. Krummel and Stanley Sadie (1990), another important source of information for music printing and publishing, is much wider in scope than the three English-focused dictionaries. It covers European music publishing and printing from the earliest stages in the fifteenth century to the end of the 1980s. It includes a dictionary of music publishers and printers, and is perhaps the most accessible resource tool for European and American publishers.

While these works are milestones in the history of British music publishing, and valuable bibliographic tools, they do not provide adequate knowledge of any one music publisher’s output, or investigate the make-up of the market for printed music. A few major publishers are discussed at length, and owing to their aim of comprehensive coverage and their purpose as dictionaries, these writings do not offer a reader any coherent picture of the music-publishing scene of the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth centuries.

To date, the most important published study of a single music publisher is William C. Smith’s A Bibliography of the Musical Works Published by John Walsh during the years 1695-1720 together with its companion volume, A Bibliography of the Musical Works Published by John Walsh during the years 1722-1766 by Smith and Charles Humphries. These volumes provide extensive coverage of the publications of the firm of the elder and younger John Walsh. Each item in the bibliography is meticulously detailed and reinforced with references to advertisements of publication. The authors have also assembled a list of catalogues issued by the firm further increasing our understanding of the scope and diversity of music brought out by these landmark English music publishers of the early eighteenth century. There have been several writings devoted to the firm of Novello including Michael Hurd’s Vincent Novello: and company, and A century and a half in Soho: a short history of the firm of Novello, publishers and printers of music, 1811-1961.

A handful of theses deal with British music publishers of the nineteenth century: Victoria Lee Cooper’s “The House of Novello: Practice of Policy of a Victorian Music Publisher (1829-1866),” John Francis Wilbraham’s “Music Publishing in London during the Period 1800-1850,” Katharine Hogg’s “Music Publishing in London, 1773-1834: the Preston firm.” Cooper’s thesis chronicles the history of the publishing firm of Novello and discusses the way music publishing functioned in Victorian England. Wilbraham broadly examines general aspects of music-publishing, publishers, and the printing methods of the period before listing publishers according to their residential patterns – Holborn to St. Paul’s, publishers of Cheapside and Cornhill, the Strand to Fleet Street, Haymarket and Regent Street, Bond Street and Oxford Street, and Soho. Although a large number of individual publishers are mentioned, each is only briefly discussed and there is no close examination of a publisher’s output, or of publishers’ catalogues, either on a publisher-by-publisher basis or as a body of information on the taste, repertoire and performance practice of the period. Hogg’s thesis is on the firm of Preston (1774-1834). It offers the history of the firm, the nature of Preston’s publications, and gives a listing of catalogues issued by the publishers. However, little attention is paid to the musical taste and performance practice of the period.

This dissertation is intended to address the paucity of literature about London music publishers, especially in relation to the catalogues they issued. By documenting the production of catalogues and systematically examining their contents, this study makes the case that they are the most comprehensive reflection that we have of the activities of London music publishers across a changing half century, and argues their value as a primary source in the study of musical culture of their time.

As summaries of the offerings of commercial enterprises, the catalogues in this study closely mirror the changes in musical fashions. They present us with invaluable, and hitherto unexplored guides to the make-up of the London music market and to evolving musical tastes around the turn of the century, to the reception of particular repertoires and to musical instruments in or out of vogue. My extensive search through contemporary sources and entries at Stationers’ Hall has reinforced my conclusion that for a significant number of publications, catalogues are the only extant source to prove their existence, and only catalogues reveal the activities and roles of certain publishing firms. In its totality, the study of catalogues enables us to better understand music for popular entertainment and restore a repertoire, now largely forgotten or derisively dismissed, to its rightful place.

The time-frame of this study encompasses decades of rapid development and considerable social, economic and technological development. A paper-making machine was invented at the close of the eighteenth century and the printing process was also mechanised by the introduction of the Stanhope Press in 1800, followed by the steam-powered press in 1814. The combination of such advances in the printing industry and the increasing and ever-speedier factory production of cheap pianos stimulated an explosive growth and demand for printed music. The rise of the bourgeois middle class at the close of the eighteenth century changed the structure of the music publishers’ market and may be considered the major force affecting the operation of music publishers in the early nineteenth century. As the most significant consumers of printed music, the middle class represented a new target for publishers and composers alike, who concentrated increasingly on promoting repertoires that exploited the tastes and technical capability of this bountiful market.

The Bibliography of London music publishers’ catalogues of music for sale is at the heart of this dissertation. It comprises more than 1100 entries of catalogues issued by London music-publishing firms. There is a full bibliographic description of each catalogue and its associated states. In addition, the contents and their manner of organisation within a catalogue are described. The music items in which a catalogue has been located are detailed. Where these music items were registered at Stationers’ Hall, the date of entry also is given, as are publication announcements and reviews appearing in contemporary sources. The technical apparatus of the Bibliography and the concept of “states” of a catalogue are explained more fully in the Introduction to the Bibliography. But it may be remarked here that the large number of catalogues found in multiple states shows that many were evolving affairs, reflecting a publisher’s adjustments to market forces or changes in the fortunes of his business.

Six commentary chapters surround the Bibliography. The first four deal with practical matters which range from commercial considerations of advertising by catalogues through the printing processes involved in the production of catalogues to the acquisition of music items by publishers. The contents of catalogues and the diverse ways in which these are organised and displayed are dealt with in Chapter Five. The discussion emphasises the importance of catalogues as historical touchstones of contemporary taste and observes that through their contents, catalogues (and ultimately music publishers) had the power to manipulate public predilections and engineer change.

17 These items are referred to subsequently as ‘source items’. The catalogues are termed ‘within music catalogues’. The catalogues printed independently of any music item are termed ‘stand alone catalogues’. The total of 1100 represents the catalogues unearthed during my research periods, February 2005 to December 2005 and February 2007 to May 2007.
Chapter One evaluates the commercial value of music publishers’ sale catalogues to the music publishing industry. It is argued that although sale catalogues were not the only means of advertising available, music publishers considered them a most indispensable and powerful tool. Other available advertising media such as newspapers, music and non-music journals and broadsheets, are introduced to better place catalogues in the context of the way the public might be informed of new music publications. The focus is on two major aspects of advertising, cost and effectiveness, which draw attention to the reasons catalogues became the major advertising outlet for the music publishers.

The technical side of catalogue production is discussed in Chapter Two. The advantages and disadvantages offered by the two major printing processes, engraving and letterpress, employed in creating catalogues are investigated. The close relationship between the physical appearances (title or thematic) and formats (stand-alone, or printed within music) of catalogues and the printing processes and the way in which catalogues were updated is also examined. The practical and economical considerations involved and the conventions practised by London music publishers in the catalogue production process are the major themes of this chapter, illustrated by case-studies of the operation of selected publishing firms.

Chapter Three explores various bibliographical tools used in the dating of catalogues and the music listed. They are divided into two classes: internal and external evidence. The former includes discussion and evaluation of watermark dating, publishers’ imprints, and publishers’ plate numbers. External evidence includes entries of music publications in the registers of Stationers’ Hall, publication announcements in newspapers, and reviews of publications in music and non-music journals. This chapter suggests how this external and internal evidence might be combined to achieve a precise dating of catalogues, but also cautions that some evidence can be sufficiently misleading to prevent accuracy. The validity of dated catalogues is also critically examined.

The ‘provenance’ of the music publications listed in London music publishers’ catalogues is examined in Chapter Four within the framework of four categories: 1) original publications, 2) legitimate acquisitions from other publishers, 3) imported music (foreign prints), and 4) publications pirated from continental and other London-based publishing firms. Each category is presented with examples and evidence. This chapter discusses the makeup of London music publishers’ catalogues.
Chapter Five is concerned with "reading" the catalogues and seeks to demonstrate why catalogues are invaluable documents in aiding our understanding of the musical milieu of the period concerned. This chapter outlines the evolution of catalogues from the broad-ranging umbrella type (multi-medium, multi-genre, multi-composer) of the late eighteenth century to more specialised single-entity type of catalogues (single-medium, single-composer, and single-genre) in the nineteenth century. It examines the way music publishers vigorously exploited the market for printed music using catalogues as a commercial device ever-more precisely focussed on the medium of performance, or on composer or genre. Analyses of the contents of the different types of catalogues supplement this discussion.

Chapter Six continues this discussion. It is devoted to perhaps the most specialised type of catalogue: the thematic catalogue. The rise of the thematic catalogue in the London music-publishing scene further demonstrates the acumen of publishers as they reserved this format for capturing a place in the most intensively-competitive market of all; the fickle ever-changing mix of most popular composer and most popular genre in the lucrative world of piano music for the middle class.

* * * *

This dissertation has opened up a relatively neglected aspect of music history and music bibliography in its thesis that music catalogues are possibly the most accurate reflection of all the nuances of a period rapidly changing in its tastes and preferences. Hopefully, it will encourage future studies in this area. The relationship between music engravers and music publishers; operations of individual publishing houses; a more detailed account of English music publishers’ plate numbers than is offered by Neighbour and Tyson;\(^\text{18}\) and reliability of entries at Stationers’ Hall as a source for dating music are all topics deserving further research. The Bibliography of catalogues in this dissertation is the first endeavour in this field of music bibliography. While it presents the productions of more than one hundred music publishers, some erstwhile entries will have eluded capture. At the very least, other source items in which a particular catalogue is printed will be located; probably a further state or even states of some catalogues will come to light; and catalogues that escaped the author's searches no doubt will be unearthed. However, with a framework for research in place, such finds can be slotted in quite readily and their significance evaluated and described in terms of the interpretative mechanisms put forward in the chapters making up the commentary.

Future research can only increase our knowledge of this public face of the operation of an industry that effectively underpinned all aspects of music-making. Whether such music-making was carried out by professionals or amateurs, in the concert hall or in the home, it was against a backdrop of an ever-increasing production of music in print that facilitated performance and directed and influenced public taste, a production that was itself publicised and promoted in a burgeoning array of music catalogues.

19 From time to time music publishers included a reference to a recently-published catalogue when advertising their latest publications in the contemporary press. Almost invariably the title was so loosely worded as to make identification impossible but it seems in some instances that this is the only knowledge we have of these catalogues; no copies have been located. For example, Hamilton added “NB. Just published a Catalogue of modern Music, with prices marked, by A. Hamilton.” at the conclusion of his advertisement of “Cheap Musical Instruments and printed Music” in the Morning Chronicle 27 June 1801; and in advertising “New Instrumental Music” in the same newspaper on 9 September 1805, added “Where may be had [at his premises], Mr. H[amilton]’s Catalogue, containing many capital Pieces …” Walker added to his advertisement of 2 April 1811 in the Morning Chronicle “Also a great variety of New Music, a catalogue of which may be had of G. Walker …” No extant catalogues can be matched to these advertisements.
CHAPTER 1.

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF
LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHERS’ SALE CATALOGUES

The primary function of music publishers’ sale catalogues was to promote publications for sale. That so many catalogues survive\(^1\) suggests they were seen as the most effective and efficient means of alerting an interested public to the ever-increasing number and diversity of music publications available for purchase in the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth centuries. However, catalogues were not the only means of advertising available to music publishers. Newspapers carried publication announcements, and new works were regularly reviewed in music and non-music periodicals. Publishers also issued flyers or pamphlet-type promotional aids; these were ephemeral productions, which listed a number of selected publications, frequently with detailed descriptions of the works and excerpts from the publication reviews in contemporary periodicals.\(^2\) Window displays (or notices placed on shop windows) in music publishers’ premises were also used to inform and attract potential buyers. Even the location of business premises indirectly served as a means of advertising, since music publishers tended to congregate in certain localities of London. Ownership of a shop in the areas people readily associated with the music-trade, particularly Oxford Street, New and Old Bond Streets and Soho, would have provided a certain commercial advantage.\(^3\)

The aim of this chapter is to assess the commercial value of publishers’ salecatalogues to the music trade as an advertising tool in comparison with other forms of advertising then available. The need to compare various means of advertising has come from observing that although substantial numbers of music publications were found only as entries in catalogues, catalogues by themselves did not represent an exhaustive listing of all publications brought out by music publishers. Furthermore, it is clear from a reading of publication announcements and reviews in the contemporary press that not all

\(^1\) The author has unearthed over 500 catalogues; large numbers of these catalogues were found in multiple states, to give a total of more than 1100 issues. These are set out in the Bibliography.

\(^2\) Examples are to be found in the John Johnson Collection of Ephemera, Bodleian Library, Oxford University.

publications were advertised through these channels, or to the same extent. The criteria which determined whether certain works were to be included or excluded from catalogues, or advertised using other means, are hard to pin down, as records and evidence for such an investigation are scarce.\(^4\)

Two aspects of advertising, effectiveness and cost, will be discussed in this chapter. The effectiveness of any means of printed advertising was determined by readership numbers and, more importantly, whether the advertisements successfully reached the targeted markets. The cost of advertising was governed by conditions such as the printing process employed, the medium used, and the size and frequency of advertising. These two aspects are considered to be of primary importance in determining the commercial value of the catalogues. However, this study does not intend to provide any statistical analysis of the costs of and the revenues generated from various advertising methods.

The introduction of catalogues of music for sale into the music publishing trade in England began in the early- to mid-seventeenth century. Precursors of sale catalogues may be found on the title pages of music prints as lists of publications ‘also available from this publisher,’ ‘also to be had of this publisher,’ or ‘other works by this composer.’ Even after printing full folio-sized catalogues within music publications became the norm, publishers did not abandon this advertising practice.

The development of functionally distinctive music publishers’ sale catalogues in England is generally agreed to have begun with John Playford (1623-1686/87),\(^5\) an eminent seventeenth-century publisher, active in London from about 1650. Playford’s only known catalogue, “A Catalogue of all the Musick-Bookes [sic] that have been Printed in England, either for Voyce [sic] or Instruments,” is dated 1653.\(^6\) However, we have a record of the existence of a sale catalogue, ‘Musick bookes [sic] printed in England,’ issued by Thomas Este in 1609, although no copy of such a catalogue has come down to us.\(^7\) Henry Playford, who succeeded his father, issued three additional catalogues, around 1690, 1691 and 1697 respectively;\(^8\) but his use of catalogues as an advertising tool was not extensive.

Less than a century later, many of the publishers concerned in this study frequently printed a succession of catalogues within music publications, or occasionally issued catalogues as stand-alone

\(^4\) However, a reasonable assumption might be that new publications which would bring worthwhile financial return were advertised via more than one medium.

Evidence such as the publisher’s plate numbers, watermark dates and other dating tools including publication announcements in the contemporary press, prove that most catalogues were updated regularly, in some cases within a space of a couple of months.

I. EFFECTIVENESS OF ADVERTISING

The appearance of advertisements in newspapers dates back to the late-seventeenth and early-eighteenth centuries. The first daily English newspaper, the Daily Courant commenced in 1702,10 and was followed by the Daily Post and the Daily Journal in 1724.11 By the second half of the eighteenth century, newspapers had become an integral part of English society. According to the 1785 book trade directory, Pendred’s List of the Master Printers in London, Westminster, and Southwark,12 London alone had nine morning newspapers in circulation, including the Daily Advertiser (1730-1807), the Morning Chronicle (from 1770), the Morning Post (from 1772), and the Daily Universal Register (from 1785, and continuing as The Times from 1788). Additionally, ten evening newspapers, six weekly and three Sunday newspapers are listed in the directory. That advertisements were a mainstay of newspapers, is evident from the entries in the directory. Along with newspaper proprietors’ imprints, most entries appear with the description, “Advertisements, & c. are taken,” and the names of places (mostly coffee houses) where the advertisements were to be submitted.13

It has not been established when a music publication was first announced in English newspapers. John Walsh (1666-1736), who began publishing music in 1695 advertised his first publication in the weekly London Gazette in July 1695 and thereafter regularly advertised across a spread of newspapers: the London Gazette (commenced 1665), the Post Boy (1695-1728), the Flying Post (1696-1733), the Post Man (1695-1730), the Daily Courant (1702-1735), the Tatler (1709-1711), the Evening Post (1709-1732) and the Spectator (1711-1712).14

9 Stand-alone catalogues make up just over 10% of entire catalogue production.
Newspapers had larger circulations than other types of printed media. During the 1790s, the circulation of The Times was approximately 2000; the sales of the Morning Chronicle were just over 1000 and reached 4000 in 1807. Provincial papers had lower circulation figures; that of the Windsor and Eton Express was around 500 in 1812, reaching nearly 800 in 1837. These figures may not seem substantial now, but it must be remembered that a single copy of a newspaper would have been read by a larger number of people in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries than is the case today.

Coffee houses, widespread in London and the provinces, were regular subscribers to newspapers; these were gathering places frequented by many men of the middle-classes, so the readership could have been much larger than the figures suggest. The circulation level guaranteed a wide exposure of the advertisements appearing within them and newspapers, as far as the readership numbers are concerned, certainly would have been a valuable means of advertising.

An additional advantage offered by this medium was immediacy; as many newspapers were issued daily there was little or no time delay in announcing publications as they were printed, provided advertising space was available. Publication announcements most frequently appeared under headlines such as ‘tomorrow will be published,’ or ‘this day is published.’ These cannot be taken too literally because such phrases were universally attached to most advertisements for books and music. But even so, they point to the key advantage this medium offered in presenting information.

A major limitation of newspaper advertisements in comparison to sale catalogues lay in the size of each advertisement. Space meant expense, and at a rate of seven shillings for ten lines in a single column, most advertisements seldom took up more than two inches of single column length. Within this space, advertisements were likely to accommodate about 20 titles at most (see Example 1). While the latest publications would be named individually, music publishers confined their line-space requirements by concluding an advertisement with a blanket line that gave a general indication of stock on hand. Some such lines were more informative than others. Goulding, D'Almaine & Co concluded “… with a great variety of new music” and “… with a great variety of Scotch Airs, with Variations, songs, &c.”. Monzani went from “With a variety of other publications” to “… Nos 1 - 114 of Italian periodical songs … by Mozart and others.” “All the Songs, Duets, Trios, &c single, out of Mozart's Operas” and “Where may be had all the Publications belonging to the Opera [Music

19 James P. Woodruff and H. B. De Groot, “‘This Day is Published’ Advertisements in Periodicals as a Means of Dating Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century Publications,” Victorian Periodical Newsletter 11, No. 3 (Fall 1978): 105. The implications of such phrases such as “This Day is Published” are discussed more fully in Chapter 3.
Catalogues, free of such tight space restrictions, allow us a much more precise insight into the repertoire, spelling-out the items hinted at in those single-line generalisations. For example Monzani’s catalogue should be placed alongside his two intimations of works by Mozart in stock (see Catalogue Plate 1-1).

The preference for small advertisements by newspaper proprietors ties in with their concern for the size and breadth of their readership. Newspapers were not specialised journals; profit lay in large numbers of small miscellaneous advertisements of diverse interests rather than in a few long advertisements across a more restricted field. This policy also ensured a steady flow of advertising revenue; any fluctuation in a few regular clients placing long advertisements would have a severe effect on revenue. A large number of clients inserting small advertisements reduced such financial risks.

21 Representative of this situation is the advertisement inserted by Hamilton in the Morning Chronicle 25 December 1801. Typically, twenty titles are set out, the advertisement then closing with “The above [items], with many other modern Authors, too numerous to insert here, are comprised in the Catalogue…” The catalogue may be identified as HA 1a ‘A. Hamilton’s Catalogue of Instrumental & Vocal Music’ (late 1801 or early 1802).
Monzani’s Periodical Italian Songs, Nos. 1 to 114 are marked in red.
The universality of newspapers limited their effectiveness in directed advertising. Obviously, not all newspaper readers were music publishers’ potential customers. The effectiveness of newspaper advertisements of new music publications was further reduced by the layout and format in which they normally appeared – usually on the front page within a ‘classified ad,’ section which dealt with a wide variety of advertisements of various trades. Publication announcements were the companions of advertisements for proprietary medicine, fashion goods, household goods or properties. In appearance, advertisements of whatever items showed little variation in font or style. Text-based, they were remarkably uniform. (See Example 2.) In such a layout, announcements of music items could easily be overlooked without close inspection of several columns – a further limitation on the effectiveness of newspaper advertising. Readers interested only in the leading articles and the latest news and foreign affairs (invariably on the inside pages) may have skipped the advertisement section altogether.

I. EFFECTIVENESS OF ADVERTISING – II) MUSIC CATALOGUES

In terms of the layout and coverage, catalogues of music could offer substantial advantages. This alone goes far in explaining why most music publishers used catalogues as their main advertising tool. Even Playford’s catalogue of 1653, which is considered the earliest extant example of a ‘functionally distinctive’ sale catalogue, illustrates this particular strength of the catalogue. Within a single folio sheet, he managed to list most of his major publications, at the same time providing users with an ‘overview of music characterising an entire era [the first half of the seventeenth century].’

Typical publishers’ catalogues differed significantly in terms of the visual organisation of text from the publication announcements commonly found in the newspapers, even though the information provided was essentially the same, comprising titles of works, names of composers and prices of each item. In catalogues publications were arranged in a way which allowed users to gain an overall picture of the range of music available at a glance, as contents were usually organised by medium or genre using category and sub-category headings. (See Catalogue Plate 1-2.) Single-medium catalogues could effectively publicise the various works which were available for a particular instrument. Publishers could approach a specific market with specialised catalogues which reflected the interest of that market.

25 See Chapter 5 for a discussion of the layout of catalogues and the rise of the single-medium, single-genre and single-composer catalogues.
Example 2. Classified Ad Section from The Times, Tuesday 19 March 1835
Catalogues also had an advantage in that they allowed progressive and cumulative advertising. As most catalogues were engraved, publishers could introduce new works over time, utilising spaces deliberately left blank in the initial stage of setting out the contents of a catalogue. In addition, publishers often inserted information regarding other subsidiary lines of business including instrument manufacturing, the delivery, tuning, selling, and letting-out of instruments, and music circulating libraries. Business relationships with other music dealers, too, could be advertised in the catalogues. Unlike newspaper advertisements, some engraved catalogues were skilfully done with decorative elements, which enhanced the visual appeal of the production.

While the dissemination of information through newspaper advertisements was largely in the hands of newspaper proprietors and their distribution systems, dissemination of information through catalogues and all aspects of their distribution lay entirely with the music publishers themselves. Catalogues could be distributed in various ways; some were more effective than others in achieving a wide coverage of potential customers and a wide geographical spread. Most commonly, catalogues were disseminated as part and parcel of a printed music item. Pages otherwise blank were given over to catalogues of publishers’ stocks. Naturally, the effectiveness of catalogues printed within music as an advertising medium depended upon the sales of publications in which they were contained. Printed within a music item, they were, in effect, offered gratis, and their position meant they could scarcely be avoided. We may also assume that at least for large publishing firms with extensive distribution networks, dissemination of their catalogues was not confined to England, as by the late eighteenth century, London music publishers had well-established business connections with music publishers on the Continent.

Likewise, stand-alone catalogues would have been widely disseminated to music dealers in the provinces and to music publishers on the Continent. The extent of stand-alone catalogues varied significantly, from a few pages (folio or octavo) to nearly 200 pages. Large stand-alone catalogues were usually priced, and in many cases were a cumulative listing of all publications issued by a publisher from the commencement of the firm up to the date of issue.

28 George Walker added to his advertisement of 2 April 1811 in the Morning Chronicle “Also great variety of New Music, a catalogue of which may be had from G. Walker, 106, Great Portland-street; J. Ashton’s, 32 Bishopgate-within; Campbell, Liverpool; Curson, Exeter; and Paine, Brighton.”
"A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music," issued by John Bland. c. 1783. (BlJ 1h)

[Contents are organised by medium and genre.]
Small pamphlet-type stand-alone catalogues (usually octavo) or flyer-type advertising aids were more ephemeral than the catalogues printed within music publications or large stand-alone catalogues. The Hirsch Collection (Hirsch IV. 1110.) at the British Library and the John Johnson Collection of Ephemera at the Bodleian Library (Oxford University) hold unique examples of pamphlets issued by T. Boosey & Co., Clementi & Co., Corri & Co., Longman & Broderip, Preston and Goulding & Co. They are most commonly in small octavo of two to four pages, printed on thin rice-paper, although one issued by Longman & Broderip (LB 6) runs to 16 pages, and Thomas Boosey’s (BoT 3) and another by Longman & Broderip (LB 4) to eight pages. Because of their highly ephemeral nature, we have little knowledge of the size of print-runs, the quantity or frequency of issues, and the manner of distribution of these pamphlets. Some pamphlets in the Johnson Collection are printed with the month and year of issue (BoT 3, CM 7, 8, 10, 11 and 13) which may indicate that they were brought out monthly. Others examples from the Johnson and the Hirsch Collections only have the year of issue, and some are not dated. (See Table 1). Such pamphlets may have been handed out to the customers who came into music shops, or distributed on the streets. However, their ephemeral nature hints that their purpose was to draw attention to works of ‘immediate appeal.’

Pamphlet-type promotional aids are unique in that they contain only a handful of publications accompanied by highly favourable reviews. With publishers in total control of the contents of these pamphlets, this type of advertising allowed them to set out in detail the merits of the works they were promoting. In this sense, such advertising seems closer to the nature and spirit of the advertising with which we are familiar today. Music publishers could actively promote their publications in a market which was becoming increasingly competitive.

The publishing firms of Clementi and of Preston deserve a special mention in terms of their across-the-board use of non-newspaper advertising tools. As shown in Table 2, the majority of publishers concerned in this study printed catalogues within music publications. Only a small number of publishing firms issued catalogues as stand-alone productions, and only those of substantial size brought out large, cumulative stand-alone catalogues. Pamphlet-type promotional aids were even more infrequently issued. For instance, Goulding (later as D’Almaine & Co.) issued none of the pamphlet type varieties, and only three stand-alone catalogues, yet 43 catalogues produced by the firm have been found within music publications. Chappell issued 19 catalogues, and all were single folio sheet catalogues printed within music items. Clementi, on the other hand, issued 11 catalogues printed within music, one cumulative stand-alone catalogue, five pamphlet-type catalogues, and two pamphlet-type promotional aids. Likewise, we have examples of all four types issued by the firm of Preston.

Pamphlet-type promotional aid issued by Clementi and Co. This example is not dated.
Its contents and publication reviews suggest that it was issued c. late 1822 or early 1823.

I. Effectiveness of Advertising – III. Other Media

The arrival of music journals opened up a new medium for advertising. Among the music journals of the early nineteenth century, The Harmonicon (1823-33) and the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review (QMMR, 1818-30) were relatively long-lived. Naturally their readership consisted chiefly of those with a particular interest in the subject and therefore they would have provided music publishers with opportunities for more focused advertising in the form of announcements and reviews of publications. Music publications were advertised in general periodicals too. The Monthly Magazine (1796-1843) devoted a small portion of almost every issue to musical matters. The Gentleman's Magazine (or the Monthly Intelligencer, 1731-1868) featured reviews of music publications from 1813 to 1816.
The readership of periodicals was considerably less than that of newspapers. A detailed account of the print-run of the Harmonicon is available for at least a limited period of its existence. From January to June 1828, 2000 copies were printed each month; from July to December of that year the print-run was reduced by 500 copies. The actual sales were considerably lower than the print-runs, only an average of 1598 copies monthly were sold in the first half of the year; in the second half the sales dropped to an average of 1128 copies. In the following year, the average sales declined further to 712 copies a month and 1833, the year leading to the magazine’s demise, saw a further reduction in the readership, with monthly sales reaching only 455 in the first half, and 425 in the second half of that year.

General periodicals like the Monthly Magazine (1796-1843) would have had a larger number of subscribers and readers than music periodicals, but as with advertising in newspapers, not all the readers would have been interested in their musical contents.

In her analysis of the Harmonicon, Leanne Langley has suggested that the “attractiveness of the Harmonicon as an advertising medium was seasonal.” Its attraction fluctuated in keeping with the London concert season with the number of advertisements in January being five times higher than in the August or September issue. This implies that advertisers sensed the fluctuation, which in turn suggests the periodical’s readership also peaked soon after the beginning of the London concert season, and dropped towards its end. Although the number of music publications reviewed in each issue did not fluctuate as such, with the decreased number of readers, the effectiveness of publication reviews as an advertising tool would also have been significantly reduced. Furthermore, this medium scarcely provided music publishers with the same degree of immediacy offered by exposure in daily or weekly newspapers. The Harmonicon was a monthly magazine, and the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review was issued quarterly. This infrequency of issue would have been a limiting factor further reducing the effectiveness of advertising, especially for publications which required immediate media exposure.

In addition, music publishers had no control over the reviews themselves. Many were favourable, which certainly would have enhanced both the saleability and awareness of the reviewed publications in the market. However, not all reviews were constructive; at times they appear detrimental to sales. Yet even condemnatory reviews gave publicity and may have stimulated a curious interest resulting in increased sales.

31 Langley, “The Life and Death of The Harmonicon,” 146.
32 The January 1830 issue of The Harmonicon featured reviews of 44 items; 32 in February; 52 in March; 45 in April; 48 in May; 45 in June; 53 in July; 36 in August; 30 in September; 31 in October; 38 in November; and 27 in the December issue.
The distribution of music and non-music journals which had publication announcements and reviews as one of their permanent features was likely to have been at the national level. In this sense, journals were a valuable avenue for publishers, especially for the items which did not require “immediacy” of purchase.

Advertisements for music publications also seem to have appeared on music publishers’ shop-windows. Publishers may well have used music title pages as broadsheets or posters. Likewise, the folio-sized catalogues placed within music items, printed independently, could have appeared on shop windows. Stand-alone single folios might readily have been so displayed. Such practices seem borne out by the pictorial title page of a music publication issued by Mayhew and Co. (See Illustration 1.)

Here, the business premises of the publishers (evident from the shop signboards) are the backdrop; on the shop windows are what appear to be broadsheets which advertise a variety of music published by the firm. This type of advertising would have had a stronger visual impact than any other advertising media considered here. It was the most uncomplicated, unsophisticated type of advertising available, and publishers did not have to pay for it. At the same time, it allowed publishers to appeal directly to customers by offering information at the point of purchase.

II. COST OF ADVERTISING

The conditions which determined the cost of advertising in newspapers would have been similar to the present day. Advertisers were charged by column space. Not surprisingly, newspapers with a larger circulation were more costly for advertisers. In 1815 the Morning Chronicle’s minimum charge was 7s. for an advertisement of up to 10 lines in a single column on the front page, with additional lines charged at around 6d. per line. A slightly cheaper rate was charged by provincial newspapers such as the Windsor and Eton Express. In 1821, its minimum charge was around 3s.6d. While advertisements in newspapers appear to have been exorbitantly expensive, the charges obviously were calculated to cover all the production costs, the printing and paper, as well as the cost of distribution.

Because of the ephemeral nature of newspapers, music publishers frequently re-inserted the same advertisements several times within a short space of time or, in some cases, months apart. It is highly likely that such a practice recognised a need for the cumulative effect of repetitive advertising for this medium. Music publishers may have received concessions from newspaper proprietors, for purchasing a certain amount of advertising space for a given period of time; in such cases, we may assume that subsequent appearances of the same advertisement cost less than the first appearance.

The cost of having publications reviewed in music and non-music journals is difficult to assess. While publishers may not have paid for this, they were presumably required to send complimentary copies to the publishers of the periodicals. Reviews of a selection of items subsequently appeared in a journal’s “publication reviews” section. However, the supply of free copies did not guarantee that reviews would follow. In all, this means of advertising may well be regarded the most uncertain medium, and the cost of advertising would have varied more than that of other media.

Turning to advertising through catalogues of music and promotional pamphlets we encounter a more precise picture of costs. Expenses for origination, printing, paper and distribution, subsumed in the single cost of space in newspaper advertising, now become specifics. Advertising through catalogues and pamphlets puts the publisher in control of all costs. Catalogues are the outreach arm of a publisher’s own business.

A large number of the catalogues concerned in this study originated as engraved plates. It is possible that this work was delegated to engravers of music title pages or more probably to general jobbing engravers. As catalogues are mostly text and number based, they did not really require the expertise of music engravers. If music engravers were involved, we cannot be certain that they were paid at the same rate for engraving catalogues as for music. Certainly the time taken, and thus the cost of engraving would have differed from catalogue to catalogue as the number of entries in each varied significantly. Some catalogues were engraved freehand; others were mostly produced by using letter-punches, again factors affecting the speed of production.

Unfortunately, there is next to no information on the cost of engraving text or even on the average wage of music engravers of the period. Some guide to the cost of engraving music in England lies in William Forster’s estimates for producing Haydn’s ‘Passion’ (the Seven Last Words) in 1786-7. The price of a pewter plate is given as 1s.6d, and engraving as 4s.6d per plate – a total cost of 6 shillings per plate. We also have the estimates George Thomson received for the engraving of Beethoven’s nine sets of themes with variations in 1819: “For engraving 66 plates, & for the metal, £22.14.0.” Thomson would have cost approximately 6s.10d. per plate. On these figures, and if we assume the cost of engraving texts were identical to that of music, it would have cost just over 6s. to prepare the printing surface of a folio-sheet catalogue into the early nineteenth century. For catalogues printed

36 See Chapter 2, pp. 51-60.
37 This matter of in-house or out-of-house preparation of catalogues is raised here as a facet of this survey of the costs of catalogue production. It is discussed more extensively in Chapter 2 in the consideration of technical aspects of catalogue production.
Within music, there was no additional cost of paper. At this point a music publisher would make the greatest savings as these catalogues were printed on pages which were usually left blank, and being printed at the same time as the music plates, the additional cost of ink and labour probably was marginal.

Considering an engraved catalogue of the period averaged around 300 entries per plate, in terms of the quantity of information presented, catalogues vis à vis newspaper insertions, were by far the most economic means of advertising. To this we must add an important aspect of printing from engraved plates. Once engraved, publishers could immediately use the same catalogue plate in any number of music items to catch a wide market, and as well, there could be subsequent reuse and updating, without further capital being invested in new pewter plates, the preparation of a new printing surface and complete re- engraving.

Catalogues printed from letterpress would have incurred different printing costs. It is generally understood that letterpress was a low-cost printing process for a large print-run; labour was cheaper (being less skilled) and more abundant than for engraving. In the case of large stand-alone catalogues, another cost-reducing factor was that paper used in letterpress printing could be thinner than that required for printing from engraved plates.

Against this, the opportunities to recoup some portion of these expenses were limited. Catalogues printed within music publications were, of course, free. However, there seems no reason why such an engraved plate could not be put through the press independent of a music item. Any catalogue so printed may have been handed out gratis over the counter by music publishers or their agents or in some instances, sold. John Bland’s action may represent a widespread practice. Each of his three catalogues ‘(Page 1.) Catalogue of Instrumental Music; ‘(Page 2.) Catalogue of Harpsichord Music’; ‘(Page 3.) Catalogue of Vocal Music’ (BJ 9) were printed within music items. Each was also printed off separately from the engraved plate and sold for 6d. as stated in each of the three ‘may be had in 3 Parts. * Price Sixpence each.’

None of the small pamphlet-type catalogues and promotional aids (all printed from letterpress) in the Johnson Collection and the Hirsch Collection has a price printed on it; they probably were freely distributed. On the other hand, large stand-alone catalogues were sold for up to 2s. 6d, the price of the 189 page catalogue issued by Clementi in 1823 (CM 9).

40 Technical aspects of printing and updating catalogues are discussed in Chapter 2, pp. 33-44.
CONCLUSION

Various advertising methods offered their unique advantages and disadvantages. To gain maximum benefit, music publishers explored more than one method of advertising. Large publishing firms such as Chappell & Co., Goulding, J. Power, R. Cocks & Co., T. Boosey and Co. and Wessel & Co. were more adventurous, making extensive use of newspaper advertisements, catalogues and journals. Advertisements by small publishers are only occasionally found in newspapers or in contemporary periodicals. Many publishers may have found placing advertisements in newspapers prohibitively expensive; catalogues were an affordable and even superior alternative even for small-scale firms.

For certain works, the advertising means employed may have changed over a period of time, depending on the market response and anticipated popularity of the works. When a work was newly published and considered a best-seller or immediately topical, it may have been first announced in a newspaper, and then sent to journals for review. Its publisher may have promptly updated his catalogues to include the new item, or there may have been a considerable time delay between the publication date and such updating. Once established, it was probably retained in the catalogues until its popularity waned completely, or until it was removed by the need to include new and more desirable publications. Those works not expected to be an overnight success but with on-going sales potential, may have been advertised only through catalogues. This suggests that advertising music publications even in the late eighteenth century was not a simple operation.

Catalogues may have served as a rudimentary database for publishers to inform customers at any given point of time of items currently in print, or which could still be printed on demand (that is, when engraved plates remained available), while obsolete and out-of-print items would be deleted through regular updating. Furthermore, with catalogues publishers could advertise music publications in a visually user-friendly and effective manner. Catalogues played a significant role in facilitating direct and indirect trade with provincial agencies and foreign publishing firms and could target the niche market more directly. Undoubtedly, sale catalogues were a uniquely powerful and indispensable advertising tool for music publishers.
CHAPTER 2.

TECHNICAL ASPECTS OF PRINTING CATALOGUES

The introductory chapter to The New Grove Handbooks in Music: Printing and Publishing points out that different methods employed in printing music – letterpress, intaglio, and from the early nineteenth century, lithography – co-existed, and their waxing and waning did not follow the chronological order of their invention. The same scenario holds for the production of music catalogues although we must rule out lithography as in England this most recent of the three processes was neglected by music publishers in the earliest decades of the nineteenth-century. As for the other two processes, it appears that until well into the nineteenth century, publishers issued catalogues printed from type and from engraved plate side by side. They also readily changed from one process to another even when producing various states of the same catalogue.

This chapter examines the technical aspect of the production of music publishers’ catalogues from 1780 to 1837. It discusses the visual appearance and the placement of the catalogues and how these relate to the printing process selected and to the updating of the catalogues so characteristic of the period.

When we classify catalogues according to their appearance, we find two types: title and thematic catalogues. Each entry in title catalogues consists of the title of the composition, the name of the composer and the selling price. Each entry in thematic catalogues differs from its title counterpart in that it contains music notation in addition to these three components. If we divide catalogues according to the physical formats in which the catalogues were printed, we have, first, catalogues printed within music publications, and second, stand-alone catalogues. Stand-alone catalogues are those existing in their own right, and may range from a fly-sheet leaf to a book-like production. As we shall see, these two factors – appearance and format – were decisive in determining the printing process adopted in the catalogue production.

2 When used, it was mainly for the production of music title pages. Michael Twyman, Early Lithographed Music: A Study Based on the H. Baron Collection (London: Farrand Press, 1996), 382.

Entries in the title catalogues are purely text and number based, making these catalogues closer to the appearance of printed texts than to music. Thus we might expect the means of producing title catalogues to follow the convention of book printing that is, to be created from movable type (letterpress). However, this was not always the case with music publishers’ catalogues issued in London in the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth centuries. One of the main reasons for this is related to the format in which so many catalogues were issued and the matter of cost. As we have seen the majority of title catalogues were printed within music publications, utilizing any inner blank pages. Usually catalogues were printed on the verso of the last leaf or on the verso of the title page. They can also be found on the recto of the second leaf, with its verso containing the first page of music. This format in turn influenced the method by which catalogues were produced: not surprisingly, time after time, music and catalogues were printed by the same process, engraving.

There were two reasons for printing catalogues within music. First, paper was very expensive; printing catalogues on pages that were otherwise left blank made economic sense. Second, such catalogues were additional opportunities to publicise a quite comprehensive part of or an area of speciality within a publisher’s output. Therefore, besides placing publication announcements in daily newspapers, publishers used these blank pages for profitable self-advertising. Because of a publishers’ constant release of music publications, such catalogues were ideal for continually informing the public of the latest issues. A printing process that would allow such updating with minimal effort and cost was essential.

Stand-alone catalogues were not tied to the printing process of a parent publication. In these catalogues – invariably title catalogues – their format and text-based contents favoured the letterpress process. The larger stand-alone title catalogues tended to be book-like reference items, usually presenting a publishers’ output over a considerable period of time. Once printed, they were rarely updated; any succeeding stand-alone catalogue would be an entirely new affair appearing only after an interval of several years.
We now consider the printing processes in some detail.

I. PREFERENCE FOR ENGRAVING – ADVANTAGES OFFERED BY THE PROCESS

The preference given to the engraving process for text-only title catalogues within music publications arose from practical and economic considerations. Engraved plates were created from free-hand engraving, or by stamping metal letter-punches, or from a combination of the two methods. Copper plates were early favoured, but subsequently replaced by pewter plates.3

I. ENGRAVING – 1) PERMANENCY - CONTINUATION

A large number of catalogues from the period covered in this dissertation can be described as a “growing type,” meaning that new works were gradually added to the existing or previous states of catalogues. Such catalogues were frequently updated. That this was a widespread practice is evident from many engraved catalogues of the period with spaces left blank for the addition of further titles, or with prepared but empty staves in thematic catalogues.4 Almost certainly the initial state was designed with expansion in mind. Adding new works to an existing state or making minor changes, such as to the price of an item, was much more easily done on copper or pewter plates than re-compositing the entire catalogue when printing from type.5 The permanency of the engraved plate meant that music publishers could update their catalogues again and again until a new plate was required, due either to the over-crowding of entries, or to plates worn-out or cracked from constant re-use. Such plates would have been stored on a publisher’s premises; maintenance, if any, was minimal; beyond cleaning the plate surface after completion of the printing. The portability of the engraved plate and the lack of additional materials such as sets of type must have been an added bonus.

John Bland’s first catalogue, ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music’ (BlJ1) seen in 10 different states (BlJ 1a to 1j) is a prime example of the permanency of the engraved plate for the 4 Each successive state of a catalogue was considered “ephemeral” in the sense that a state would be supplanted by an expanded succeeding state. The last state to appear was not “ephemeral” but definitive simply because it had no successor. It would be most unlikely that a publisher began a catalogue with a fixed number of successive states in mind.

5 Catalogues printed from letterpress normally do not contain blank spaces left for later additions of items, as the process does not render itself to such updating of catalogues.
“growing type” of catalogues. The first two states (1a and 1b) were printed from the same plate in 1782; the third to tenth states were all printed from a re-engraved plate between 1782 and 1783. BJ 1c contains 185 entries, and BJ 1j, 238 entries, but the differences between any two consecutive states usually lies only in the addition of some four to fourteen items. Without close comparison, such a pair of states may be dismissed as identical resulting in bibliographic confusion.\textsuperscript{6}

Examination of three consecutive states (1h, 1i and 1j) of the catalogue, illustrate this recognised virtue of the engraving process in catalogue production. (See Catalogue Plates 2-1, 2-2 and 2-3)

A comparison of the different states of a catalogue while underlining the permanency of an engraved plate, can reveal an engraver’s ingenuity in updating catalogues to maximize the use of the plate. Joseph Dale’s title catalogue DJ 5 illustrates how new works might be squeezed into an already crowded plate. In the first three states (DJ 5a to 5c) the category heading of the first column ‘English Operas & Songs,’ occupies two lines. In the fourth state, DJ 5d, faced with the need to insert a new opera (\textit{The Pirate}, by Storace) into this category the category, the category heading was shorted to one line, ‘English Operas & c.’ and \textit{The Prize} inserted in the now free space.

Smaller-sized script used to insert new entry
Birchall's fourth catalogue (BR 4, 2pp fol.) was seen in twelve states issued over a period of seven years (c. late 1797 to c. 1803), and all were printed from the same two plates. This remarkable reuse of the plates well demonstrates the permanency of the engraved plate; in this instance it also demonstrates an advantage of free-hand engraving over punch-work. This technique affords flexibility in the size and spacing of lettering and allows items to be inserted in smaller sized script into later states where space is at a premium. For example, in the tenth state, BR 4i, to provide space for a new entry “Beethoven's 2 Sonatas … Op. 14. 6.0”, Birchall removed “To be continued - for Contents see General Catalogue” spread over two lines in the previous state (BR 4i) and then re-engraved the curtailed “to be continued” in smaller-sized script on one line. Lower in the same column of BR 4i, another new entry, “Cramers 3 Sonatas Op. 23 … 8.0” has been added in a minuscule script (see Catalogue Plate 2-6).

In Catalogue Plate 2-7 we have a further display of the free-hand engraver's skill in attaching new items to an existing entry when necessary. The entry “Clementi 6 [Sonatas] … [Op.] 2 … 10[s].6[d]” in the ninth state of BR 4 is adjusted to “…. Op. 2, 4 & 12 ea 10[s].6[d]” in BR 4j to accommodate Birchall’s issue of another two sets of sonatas by the composer. Likewise, “Graeff 3 [Sonatas] … [Op.] 4 … 7[s].6[d]” in BR 4i becomes “Graeff 3 [Sonatas] … [Opp.] 4 &9 ea 7[s].6[d]” in the succeeding state. At the same time, the entry for Fiorillo’s sonatas in BR 4i has been removed and further publications of Clementi's sonatas “Op. 21 & 22 ea 7[s].6[d]” inserted in its place.

Catalogue Plate 2-7. (BR 4i vs. 4j)
I. ENGRAVING – II) FLEXIBILITY

Engraving also offered a publisher an attractive flexibility as the process allowed changes to be made to an existing plate beyond the addition of new items. This flexibility further enhanced the advantage of permanency offered by the engraved plate. Many of these changes were minor and when introduced into catalogues of 200 entries are not always easily detected. In Longman & Broderip’s catalogues, ‘New Musical Publication’ (LB 3), the first page (of two pages) of the first (3a, c. 1780) and second state (3b, c. 1780) is identical in all respects, except for the prices of nine items: Bach’s overture to Carattico (the first column), Schwindl’s Op. 5 (the second column), and Pla’s 1st set of trios, Wendling’s Op. 1, Schwindl’s Op. 6, Boccherini’s duets for two violins, Stamitz’s duets for German flutes, Baretti’s duets for bassoons, and Schobert’s duets for bassoons (all in the third column). For instance, in LB 3a, Boccherini’s duets were priced at 4s.0d, whereas in LB 3b, the price was changed to 7s.6d; similarly the price for Schwindl’s Op. 6 had been raised from 5s.0d. to 7s.6d. (See Catalogue Plates, 2-8 and 2-9.)

As with the insertion of new items, making such minor corrections on copper or pewter plate was quite easily and speedily done by re-flattening the surface at the appropriate place using a levelling or correcting hammer from the verso side of plate. After the surface was re-polished with a burnisher, the plate was ready for re-engraving.

The per manency and flexibility of the engraving process also allowed decorative elements to enhance a catalogue’s appearance. These are more likely to appear in catalogues for periodical works as these catalogues customarily acted as passe-partout title pages for each number in a collection. The permanency of the engraved plate limited the engraving of the decorative element to a once-only expense; the flexibility of the process allowed new titles to be added to the catalogue as each number in the periodical series was issued. The decoration usually emphasised the title of the series and this, together with the imprint occupied the upper third of the plate, leaving ample space below for the catalogue itself. The generally standard design is seen in Longman & Broderip’s catalogue ‘A Collection of Periodical Italian Songs, & c.’ (LB 17), Monzani & Cimador’s catalogue ‘Periodical Italian Songs, Duets, Trios, & c.’ (MT 1) and

7 The first pages of LB 3a and 3b both contain 215 entries.
8 In the case of Boccherini’s duets, the first issue of the work contained only four duets; two duets were added later and the price increased to 7s.6d. Personal correspondence with Dr. Rudolf Rasch (Opleiding Muziekwetenschap, Faculteit Geesteswetenschappen, Utrecht University, Utrecht, The Netherlands). The author thanks Dr. Rasch for providing this information. For the bibliographer, the importance of detecting such small changes even in densely packed pages is obvious; in the Boccherini example the change of price dates the appearance of the expanded version of the duets on the English market.

Lewis Lavenu’s catalogue for ‘Periodical Italian Songs, Duetts, &c.’ (LL 1) set out in Catalogue Plates 2-10, 2-11 and 2-12. As these catalogues had a dual function – title page and catalogue – such decoration may have arisen from a commercial need to emulate the so many attractive music title pages of the period.

Catalogue Plate 2-10. LB 17 (c. 1794)

The item number (‘79’ in this example) and the price have been inserted by hand. Titles were arranged alphabetically with the blank spaces gradually being occupied as new items were added to the ‘Collection’. The numbering may indicate a publisher knew from the outset how many items would comprise the series; however, it may have been let to run on to fill the plate.

Catalogue Plate 2-12. LL 1 (c. 1800)
An additional advantage offered by the engraving process is related to the prominence engraving held over other processes in the tradition of music printing. While most publishers may not have had letterpress facilities and very few used music type, they were likely to have an in-house engraver. To print catalogues from type meant delegating the work to a letterpress printer, whereas a music engraver could produce a catalogue in the same way as he engraved music, writing free-hand right to left as mirror image using an engraver’s burin on copper plates or stamping letter-punches on pewter plates. In other words, a catalogue prepared from an engraved plate could be produced in-house with the publisher overseeing at least the origination state of the catalogue.

Engraving catalogue plates in-house also allowed immediacy of production; the preparation of the plate could progress alongside the engraving of the music. Its completion could be adjusted to match the preparation of the plates for any specific composition; its contents could be adjusted up to the very last moment to include items almost ready for printing, or to discard items delayed in or no longer proceeding to production. Above all, the catalogue plate could be placed on the printing press together with the music plate required to complete the folio. By the end of the period of this study, D’Almaine & Co., had printing facilities in-house, as most likely had other large publishing firms. Smaller publishers may have jobbed-out the printing, but at least catalogue and music plates could be sent off together so reducing the chance of misplacement. Once engraved, the catalogue plate was on hand to be used again in any number of music publications.

As shown in Table 2, a frustratingly small number of catalogues do carry names of engraving firms that are not recognised as music publishers. That all of these catalogues carrying the name of an engraver are engraved free-hand suggests that this technique lay outside the domain of the music engraver. By implication, punched plate catalogues may have been compiled in-house and the engraver, as an employee, not identified.\(^{12}\) But it must also be said that a considerable number of free-hand engraved catalogues lack any mention of the engraver. Such anonymity may indeed mean that they too were in-house productions and no attribution was required. What determined a music publisher to opt for one or the other engraving methods cannot be established but cost and speed may have played a significant role.

\(^{12}\) In this respect it is worth noting that the first four states of Birchall’s fifth catalogue (BR 5) were punch work and lacked the name of the engraver. The next five states (BR 5e to 5i) were engraved free-hand with Williamson identified as the engraver.
Table 2 indicates that successive states of a catalogue were quite likely to be prepared by the one engraver. Birchall’s ‘Catalogue of Piano Forte Music, Plate 1’ (BR 10) sheds a little light. At the foot of this free-hand engraved plate is the name ‘R. Williamson.’ This may be assumed to be the engraver. That the name remains in place throughout all four states of the catalogue issued between c. 1807 and c. 1810, suggests he was also responsible for the additions.\textsuperscript{13}

\textbf{I. ENGRAVING – IV) MUSIC TITLE PAGE ENGRAVERS AND CATALOGUE ENGRAVERS}

It is possible that engravers who prepared music title pages (rather than in-house music engravers) were also entrusted with the engraving of catalogues. Some engravers of music title pages, such as Boyce of Burnhill, and Simpkins of Clement’s Inn, also specialised in music engraving, and so were likely to have been responsible for the entire production, engraving title pages, catalogues and music, and possibly the printing. In general, the extent of the role of out-of-house engravers is rather difficult to establish.

Pictorial title-pages usually bear the name of the engraver,\textsuperscript{14} but it is difficult to say whether the placing of the engraver’s name within or immediately below a pictorial element defines the sole contribution to the plate or whether the engraver was responsible for all the work (see Illustration 3). Title pages without pictorial elements typically lack this detail, but in the few instances where engravers are named, it may be assumed that they engraved the entire plate (see Illustration 4). In these cases it might be suggested that the decorative letterings of title pages and skilfully engraved (free-hand) catalogue plates could have come from the same engraver.

This suggestion is taken further in Table 3 which puts forward the possibility of a link between a known title page engraver and the identity of the engraver of the anonymous engraved catalogue

\textsuperscript{13} The same plate was used for all states. The removal of the name might reasonably be expected if another engraver was responsible for subsequent work on the plate. Further examples are BR 5e to 5i and BR 11a and 11b.

\textsuperscript{14} The pictorial element on a title page is further complicated by the possible use of stereotype illustrative blocks. An engraving firm may have had its own assortment on hand or purchased a block appropriate to the sentiment of a music item from specimen catalogues appearing in the 1820s (see Specimen of Stereotype Ornaments, 1825, by M. U. Sears, Reprinted with an introduction by James Mosley. London: Printing Historical Society, 1990). In such instances the lettering of the title plate would be engraved allowing space for the pictorial block; presumably after the first impression was taken, the sheets would be put through the press again to receive the pictorial image. Prior to stereotype blocks becoming available any illustration must have been engraved directly onto the title page plate. This task could have been jobbed out to specialist engravers and done either before or after the lettering was engraved.

contained within the music item. The engraver of the title page of one source item for each of the catalogues listed in Table 3 can be identified. It may be proposed that the catalogue itself was prepared by this same engraver and at the same time. Unfortunately, such a scenario is rather difficult to substantiate. Catalogues are remarkably devoid of evidence that would link their preparation with a particular engraver or firm.

Nonetheless, Table 3 also indicates that certain engravers were favoured and that ongoing associations between a particular engraver and a publisher seem to have been established. T. King, Boyce, Bowman, R ( & E.) Williamson, and Barrett seem to have been particularly popular. Between 1785 and 1803 King engraved title pages for Longman & Broderip, Corri, Goulding and Broderip & Wilkinson. Williamson dominates the earliest decade of the nineteenth century being associated with Clementi, Dale, Birchall, Power, Chappell and Goulding between 1801 and 1820. From 1818 Barrett engraved title pages for Fitzpatrick & Coles, Phillips, Mayhew & Co.,
Goulding, Boosey, Chappell, Latour, Cramer, Addison & Beale, A. Pettet, H. J. Banister. This favouring of some engravers is likely to suggest a publisher's satisfaction with the efficiency and quality of their work, and we have no reason to suppose that they were not also entrusted with the preparation of catalogues.

Of the 56 source items in Table 3, 35 include either the only or the first states of the associated catalogues. It may be correct to suggest that in these instances title page and catalogue were done by the same engraver. To extend this connection to subsequent states would be rash. Against this it must be recognised that a catalogue plate can be located in several source items for which the engraver of the title page is unknown. The possibility that the anonymous title page engraver produced the catalogue plate cannot be discounted. Obviously, if the subsequent states of a catalogue were re-engraved, it would be possible for the engraver of the title page of a source item also to be responsible for the new plates. However, this can be validated only when all the source music items for a particular state of a catalogue have their title page engravers identified.

The difficulty of reaching any firm conclusion is readily illustrated. The title pages of two of the seven source items containing the only state of Broderip & Wilkinson’s catalogue BrW 2 came from different engravers (Thomas King, two title pages, and Rymer & Son); the engraver of the catalogue is not named. A possible title page/catalogue pairing may be put forward if a precise chronology of the publication of all seven items can be established. More cautionary is Goulding's catalogue GG 6. Barnes engraved the catalogue; Rymer & Son the title page of a source item. No source item with a title page engraved by Barnes has been located.

Only on very rare occasions, can the engravers of the title page and of the catalogue be shown to be one and the same (see Table 3-a). In the case of Birchall’s catalogue BR 10, Williamson was the engraver of the catalogue and probably made the alterations to the subsequent states. Unfortunately, no engraver’s name appears on title pages to the music items containing the earliest state of the catalogue; however, one source item for each of the following state has ‘R. Williamson Sculpt’ on its title page. In this instance it may be safe to name Williamson also as the engraver of the first title page. More convincing is William Hawes fourth catalogue (HW 4). Both catalogue and the title page of a source music item were engraved by Johnston (see Illustration 5 and Catalogue Plate 2-13). Clementi’s catalogue CM 2 likewise combines a title page and catalogue plate engraved by Williamson. The catalogue plate is particularly remarkable production. Not only is it most artistically laid-out and has had considerable care lavished on its creation, but it also involves two components. With the attribution to Williamson appended to both the pictorial element and the catalogue proper, there is no doubt that the plate was the work of one engraver. The printing of the plate, together with the music item, was carried out by Clementi.

It may well be that a music publisher entrusted title page and catalogue to the same out-of-house engraver who can be identified; the re-use of the catalogue plate in other music items makes such a connection difficult to trace, let alone confirm. There is little doubt that a publisher did employ the same engraver for title page and catalogue plates, but they may have been separate commissions and their combination in a music item quite fortuitous. It will take some time and considerable research to determine the extent of out-of-house and in-house engraving of catalogues. So many probabilities - some of which have been raised here - must be explored to shed light on this important aspect of a music publisher's operation in regard to the production of catalogues.

Factors which determine the expenses of printing are origination cost, in other words the cost of preparing the printing surface, the size of the print-run, and the cost of paper. As a rule, letterpress is an economical process only when a large number of copies can be printed in one print-run. Setting up the type is a labour-intensive job probably making it more costly than engraving in the origination stage. However, the paper used in letterpress printing could be thinner and thus cheaper than that required for damp printing from engraved plates. The down-side to engraving was the cost of the additional copper or pewter plates required whenever a new catalogue was produced; letterpress type could be used again and again, though doubtless purchases of new type would be made from time to time to increase the variety of fonts.

II. LETTERPRESS – 1) STAND-ALONE CATALOGUES
Throughout the period of this study, letter-press was favoured for stand-alone title catalogues, particularly for those catalogues with a substantial number of items. The “text” nature content was, of course, well suited to this process. The skills of an engraver were not required and jobbing printers could be entrusted with the entire task from typesetting to printing. Labour was cheaper and more abundant than for engraving. No plates were needed, and the type used would be the printer’s rather than the music publisher’s property. The “non-growing” nature of stand-alone catalogues meant that the dismantling of the letterpress forme and redistribution of type after printing was not a problem. The subsequent inclusion of additional titles - and thus the matter of permanency – was not an issue. Stand-alone catalogues obviously were not tied to the issuing of a particular music item and their production and issue could proceed independently.

The distribution of stand-alone catalogues is rather uncertain. We may assume the single leaf or folded sheet variety was available gratis from the publisher or his agent whether in London or the provinces. The larger stand-alone catalogues (exceeding 50 or 100 pages) seem more likely to have been browse-in-the-shop affairs, or mailed to agencies in provincial towns in England, or to music dealers on the Continent. These catalogues almost certainly were distributed widely to 19 Against that it must be remembered that the series of states that could be produced by updating a single plate represented a considerable saving in costs.

20 Such distribution seems very likely for the octavo-sized, single-leaf /pamphlet letterpress catalogues issued by Preston and Clementi.
facilitate ordering by out-of-town customers. The print-run of such catalogues may not have been large, but here economies of scale were over-ridden by other considerations. Letterpress would have been quicker than engraving for such catalogues, the visual uniformity of page after page of type was an added bonus, and above all these catalogues were reference tools destined for long service.

II. LETTER PRESS – II) THE DOMINANCE OF LETTER-PRESS: CATALOGUES WITHIN A MUSIC ITEM

Until the first half of the 1820s, the majority of music publishers favoured engraving over letterpress when catalogues were printed within music publications. With the use of letter-punches, engraved catalogues could resemble texts printed from letterpress, while allowing flexibility in organization, layout and updating of items. The conversion to letterpress for the production for a majority of catalogues printed within music publications began in the late 1820s, coinciding with the expansion (in terms of number of titles included) of publishers’ catalogues. Catalogues were out-growing what was practical for free-hand engraving or punched work. By the 1830s the change was complete. Table 4 (in comparison with Table 1) and Table 6 show the majority of catalogues within music were now printed from type, although the music itself was still printed from engraved plates but with an ever-increasing quantity of lithographic work.

This change marks turning point in the factor that determined the process for catalogue production. We have argued that format determined the use of engraved plates up to the 1820s; catalogues within music publications were prepared by the same printing process as the music. From the late 1820s format counted for less than expansion of publishers’ outputs. Burgeoning repertoires required a process that would display them comprehensively, clearly and to the best possible visual effect. Technical improvements and expansions in type fonts enabled letterpress to accomplish this more effectively than engraving. More and more printing houses could do this work quickly and economically. A widening letterpress repertoire was advertised in “specimen” catalogues issued by type-founders (see Illustration 6). The range of small fonts which would not compromise clarity in densely-packed pages, confirmed the ascendancy of type production (see Catalogue Plate 2-15).

Table 4 also indicates that the use of letterpress for catalogues printed within music items seriously affected the number of stand-alone catalogues produced from about 1825. The stand-alone catalogue did not disappear but its role as the primary vehicle for letterpress work was over. Only a few such catalogues were brought out between 1825 and 1840. Boosey’s switch from stand-alone format for his first three catalogues (1818 - 1824) to the within-music format for his remaining five catalogues (1827 - 1838) is symptomatic.\(^{21}\)

However, that change was neither universal nor simultaneous. A small number of catalogues were printed from engraved plates as late as the 1830s. Thematic catalogues issued by London music publishers were invariably engraved. All examples of thematic catalogues were of the “ongoing” or “growing” type and contained prepared staves for further works to be entered. Not only in this respect were such catalogues better served by engraving than letterpress but their fundamental feature of the incipit in music notation firmly kept them in the engravers’ domain and probably in the hands of music engravers.

II. LETTERPRESS – III) PERMANENCY OF LETTERPRESS CATALOGUES – STEREOTYPING

It has been already mentioned that the chief advantage of printing catalogues from engraved plates was the permanency afforded by the process. Once engraved, the plates were stored for later use, and could be reprinted with or without changes being made to the plates. Catalogues printed from letterpress lacked such permanency. Most jobbing letter-press printers were not likely to have kept type standing for a possible future reprinting of a catalogue. Once the print-run was complete, the forme was dismantled and the type redistributed to other jobs.

However, the introduction of stereotyping offered permanency to catalogues printed from type from the early decades of the nineteenth century. Stereotyping, the use of plaster to create a mould of a block of letterpress from which a relief printing plate could be made, had been used as early as the late seventeenth century for the production of Bible,22 and in Britain it became widely known in the first decade of the nineteenth century.23 Plates created by stereotyping could be stored and printed from on demand (see Illustration 7).24 Although once made, they could not be altered, yet through this process letterpress assumed one of the prime features which for so long had given considerable advantage to the engraved plate.

That said, stereotype plates may have allowed for a limited flexibility. It seems possible that the plate could have been incised away to allow a new portion of type to be fitted or incised into a series of component parts which could then be reassembled in a forme together with a portion of new type. In either case, the portion of new type may also have been in stereo plate format rather than font. Some such process seems to lie behind the successive states of Chappell’s catalogue CS 9. Areas in CS 9b are visually identical with CS 9c, yet in the latter state sections of the catalogue page are entirely new. This implies a reuse of the original stereotype plate but modified to accommodate new portions of type.25 (see Catalogue Plates 2-16, 2-17, 2-18 and 2-19).

23 Colin Clair, A History of Printing in Britain (London: Cassell, 1965), 218-220. The British Book Trade Index lists 60 printers who produced and printed from stereotype plates from 1780 to 1840.
24 Once made by a stereotype founder, the stereotype would be sent to the music-publisher. Possibly no print-run was ever made from the originating letterpress form. Music-publishers operating letterpress presses could print off copies when and as required.
25 The alternative explanations would require the letterpress form first set up in 1828 for CR 10a to have been retained until 1837.

It may well be that stereotyping was the technical factor allowing the rapid increase in letterpress catalogues in the 1830s. The cost of typesetting may not have been lessened but better returns through enhanced permanency now made it a more viable option. Unfortunately, we cannot determine how many of the catalogues actually were printed from stereotype plates, but it seems likely that once established the process was more and more widely used in catalogue production.

II. LETTERPRESS – IV) IDENTIFICATION OF LETTERPRESS PRINTERS

The identities of the letterpress printers are a little better known than those of the engravers of catalogues (see Table 5-a). Twenty-two printers responsible for 58 catalogues can be identified; all identifications are for catalogues printed in the nineteenth century.

Various relationships between printer and music publisher may be observed (see Tables 5b to 5d). Some publishers used numerous printers. Preston, the most extreme example, had catalogues produced by six printers. Goulding and Willis each had catalogues produced by four printers. Other publishers seemed to show loyalty to one of two firms. All of Chappell's catalogues for which a printer can be identified (CS 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 15) were produced by C. Richards of St. Martin’s Lane, Charing Cross; Falkner worked with J. Wilson, George Court, Piccadilly, for three catalogues; and Power with Conway and Rayer (two catalogues) and Clowes (one catalogue). Available data for Boosey, Walker and Latour is inconclusive. Of Willis's four printers, two (Richards and Clowes of Stamford Street) prepared seven of the nine identifiable catalogue issues.

From Table 5-b it is noticeable that some printers were particularly favoured, possibly reflecting the skill of their work or their employment of up-to-date and high quality equipment. Two printers stand out. Richards was employed by four music publishers (Preston, Goulding, Willis and Chappell) producing twelve catalogues in all; Joseph Mallet of Wardour Street, Soho, worked for six publishers, producing seven catalogues; Clowes produced six catalogues for three firms, and J. Wilson three catalogues for one publisher. Current data indicates that other firms (Hay and Turner, Gardiner, Bullock, Cox, Whiting, Nicholls, W. Wilson, and Stago and Macdonal) were used quite casually.

27 The names of the printers usually appeared at the foot of a single sheet catalogue and at the foot of the last page of a multi-sheet catalogue. See Chapter 4, Catalogue Plate 4-10.
It is worth noting that Richards, Mallett, Clowes, and Wilson rose to prominence from 1825. They can all be associated with the increasing dominance of letterpress catalogues printed within music items rather than with stand-alone productions and with catalogues that appeared within music items over a considerable period of time. This is suggestive of these firms’ flexibility and quick turn-round in production and their ability to produce stereotype plates.

Music publishers using a variety of printers tended to keep with one printer for a particular catalogue. Again, the minimal data precludes us from drawing firm and widespread conclusions but it is worth observing that Willis retained Richards for two states of WI 4; and Clowes for two states of WI 12; and Power used Conway & Rayer for the first two letterpress states of PoJ 2. Whether it is safe to conclude that Richards also was responsible for the earliest states of WI 4 and Clowes for WI 12 is problematic. Such a reservation may also be held in regard to Mallett’s printing of two states of LF 4. Mallett’s printing of the first state of CR 10 in 1829 and also the fifth state in 1838 may be stronger evidence for assuming his involvement in the intervening states. In addition, the uniformity of font employed throughout all states of CR 10 suggests Mallet was responsible all five states of the catalogue.

The majority of printers were London-based (see Tables 5b and 5c). However, some use was made of those further afield. Not surprisingly, printers in Edinburgh, the second largest centre of printing in England at this period, were engaged by some London music publishers. Preston had three catalogues (all stand alone) printed by John Moir in 1809, 1818 and 1819. Clementi used the firm of R. Menzies in 1820. Both Preston and Clementi also used East Anglian printers in the 1820s: S. Piper of Ipswich by Preston; Burks and Kinnebrook of Norwich and Sloman of Yarmouth by Clementi. Sloman was the printer of the 189 page stand-alone catalogue (CM 9) of 1823 - one of the largest examples of this type of catalogue.

28 Chappell's catalogue CS 10a printed by Richards appeared in three music items published in 1830; CS 9c appeared in 20 music items published between 1830 and 1832; CS 11a appeared in four music items published between 1830 and 1832; CS 13 appeared in two music items published in 1830 and 1831.

29 Further support for a publisher continuing with the same printer throughout the span of a catalogue may lie in Birchall's retention of McMillan for all three states of BR 13 (1807, 1809 and 1817). But this situation is somewhat different as the catalogue is contained within a treatise for which McMillan had the full responsibility of printing.

Having set out in general terms the technical processes involved in the production of music catalogues, we may now turn to a consideration of the production of several publishers in a series of case studies. These come from throughout the period covered in this dissertation. The catalogues represent both the engraving and letter-press processes; they demonstrate publishers’ awareness of the link between process and format and appearance. Above all, the case studies demonstrate the chronology of the change from the overall dominance of the engraving process to that of letterpress.

IV. Case Study – 1) 18th-century Publishers: Robert Bremner, John Bland

Robert Bremner is one of the earliest publishers concerned in this study. He established himself as a musical instrument maker, music printer and publisher in 1754. Only three of his catalogues fall within the time frame of this study yet they clearly show recognition of the role of appearance and format in determining the printing process. Bremner’s single leaf catalogue titled, ‘Additional Catalogue’ (BrR 1, 2pp fol., late 1779 or early 1780) is a stand-alone example printed from type. The second catalogue, ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music’ (BrR 2, 1p fol.) is an engraved example, and found within music publications. The title, the publisher’s imprint and the headings of each section (genres or categories) is letter-punch work; the individual items have been engraved free-hand. The third and the most extensive of the three, ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music, in Alphabetical Order,’ is another stand-alone catalogue (4pp fol.) printed from type.

The publishing firm of John Bland of 45 Holborn dates back to 1776. Bland issued 17 catalogues within 20 years, making him one of the most prolific producers of the late eighteenth century.

Throughout, the relation of catalogue type and the printing process employed is clear-cut and we can observe it maintained over a longer period of time and through more examples than is possible with Bremner. All six of Bland’s stand-alone catalogues (Bland J 4, Bland J 5, Bland J 6, Bland J 7, Bland J 3d, Bland J 8 and Bland J 12) were letterpress affairs, all were of two to four pages (Bland J 4 was the largest of all stand-alone catalogues issued by this publisher) and none was intended as “growing”. Significantly, all his other catalogues were engraved, appeared with music publications, and were of the “growing” variety. All exist in multiple states. Bland J 1 and Bland J 2 alone totalled 24 states within nine years. Bland also provides us with the earliest examples of the “growing” thematic catalogues. Bland J15, ‘Theme Catalogue of French Songs’ is seen in single state, containing 26 items, but has 34 blank staves for the further additions, a sure sign that the catalogue was intended for expansion.

32 Both catalogues were re-engraved once; Bland J 1a and 1b were printed from the same plate; from Bland J 1c to 1j were printed from a new plate. Bland J 2a to 2j were printed from the same plate and Bland J 2k to 2n from a newly-engraved plate.

Joseph Dale, who began publishing music in 1783, presents us with a text-book example of the format/process relationship in catalogue production. His unwavering use of the engraving process reflects his seemingly unchanging concept of a music catalogue as a “growing” within-a-publication affair. With three exceptions (DJ 14, 15 and 16), all of his catalogues are of the “growing” variety, and appeared in multiple states. For whatever reason – and no doubt it was commercial - Dale was not tempted by the letter-press process or the stand-alone catalogue format. His prolific output might have benefited from a cumulative catalogue but he was content to push the boundaries of the capability of the engraved plate.

Dale’s smaller catalogues contain fewer than 100 entries. His larger catalogues contain around 300 entries on the same-sized plate area and reach the borders of what an engraved plate might contain without compromising legibility (See Catalogue Plate 2-20). His techniques for accommodating an ever-growing number of entries on an already crowded plate have been mentioned earlier in this chapter.

Dale’s preference for catalogues printed within music items is matched by his preference for plates prepared by punch work which in turn may indicate in-house production. While legible, little attention seems to have been paid to visual appeal. At best, these catalogues might be described as utilitarian. Very different are the three catalogues produced entirely by free-hand engraving – ‘A Catalogue of Favorite Operas, with the Overtures & Songs, & c. Extracted; as Composed & Selected by Stephen Storace’ (DJ 8a to 8e), ‘Dale’s Collection of Duets for two Performers on One Piano Forte, by the most Celebrated Composers’ (DJ 9a and 9d); and ‘(16) ‘Music Published by Dale’ (DJ 13a to 13e). Almost certainly these are all out-of-house productions, although this can be confirmed only for DJ 8. This catalogue is also the only one to be enlivened with a decorative element – a leafy garland surrounding the title (see Catalogue Plate 2-21). The name of the engraver, ‘Barnes’, is within the decoration.\(^{33}\) The ornate lettering of title and the remarkably consistent cursive script of the individual entries make this catalogue rather attractive and suggests Barnes to have been an engraver of considerable skill.\(^{34}\)

\(^{33}\) Barnes’ name is absent in the later states of this catalogue, and the border shows signs of re-working. These states may have been handed to another engraver to modify. DJ 8e is a re-engraved plate but the garland border still surrounds the title.

\(^{34}\) Barnes was also responsible for Goulding’s catalogue GG 6 of 1802. See Catalogue Plate 2-17.

Robert Birchall commenced music publishing in 1783, and continued until his death in 1819. Birchall was almost as prolific as Dale in catalogue production, issuing 16 catalogues in 52 states over the period of 37 years. These two publishers were the pillars of catalogue production at the turn of the century.

35 Joseph Dale issued 17 catalogues in 60 states over 39 years.
Birchall was perhaps the most important publisher in the chain of successors of John Bland, taking over a number of his catalogues which become particularly prominent among Birchall's catalogues of the late 1790s. His earliest catalogue to be seen by the author is the broad-ranging umbrella catalogue ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music’ of c. 1784; his last is the specialised thematic catalogue ‘Airs, with Variations, by Josef Gelinek [1758-1825],’ (BR 16a) dated c. 1817 and reissued (16b) in his last year. In between came multi-medium and multi-genre examples, as well as the single-composer catalogue devoted to the music of Edward Briggs (BR 5) brought out between 1800 and 1815. In this respect Birchall’s catalogues suggest a publisher continually aware of and incorporating the developments such as the growing number of types of catalogues taking place in the decades he remained in business.

Like Dale, Birchall remained entrenched in the engraving process and the within-music placement of catalogues throughout his entire output. Fifteen of his sixteen catalogues were produced by free-hand engraving or by combination of free-hand and punched work.

The large total of 52 states in Birchall’s output further highlights publishers’ recognition of the benefits of the permanency and flexibility of the engraved plate. BR 4 running to twelve states between 1797 and 1803 closely parallels Dale’s catalogue DJ 4 (twelve states between 1788 and 1792). However, Dale’s catalogue was re-engraved three times, while all twelve states of Birchall’s catalogue were printed from the same engraved plates (see Table 11). They also differ in the production method; Dale’s catalogue plates were engraved using letter-punches, while Birchall’s were free-hand throughout.

36 See Chapter 4, section II. Acquisition – ii) Succession
37 Sections of Birchall's catalogue BR 4 are reproduced as Catalogue Plate 2-6.
As we have seen, Birchall relied quite heavily on R. Williamson as an out-of-house engraver. At least three catalogues were engraved by Williamson, (BR 5, 10, 11), as well as a considerable number of title pages of music items. On the basis of BR 5, it has been proposed that Birchall's punch-work catalogues may have been in-house productions; that those engraved free-hand were done out-of-house, mainly by Williamson, suggests Birchall's music engravers either lacked this skill or were constantly pre-occupied in preparing music plates for Birchall's considerable repertoire. In Birchall’s single-composer catalogue devoted to the works of Edward Smith Biggs, ‘A Catalogue of Music, Arranged, Harmonized, or Composed by Mr. Biggs’ (BR 5a to 5k), the first four states were engraved by punch work and additions to the catalogue accommodated on the same plate. Thereafter, Biggs’ continuing output necessitated a change in technique. The original plate was abandoned. Birchall engaged Williamson and the following seven states came from a free-hand engraved plate, its smaller-sized script allowed a still-growing number of items to appear on a single folio sheet. Continuity between the two plates came with the retention of the original three-column layout of the catalogue.

Birchall’s only letter-press catalogue (BR 13) was also produced by an outside firm. Here, however, the choice of process was intimately connected with the nature of the source itself – John Wall Callcott’s Musical Grammar. This treatise being more akin to a book than music, required a production that lay outside the firm’s area of expertise as well as beyond its font array and printing press equipment. Birchall entrusted the entire production to the printer, B. McMillan of Bow-Street, Covent Garden. The treatise went through three editions, 1st (1806), 2nd (1809) and 3rd (1817); the catalogue accordingly exists in three states. The first state was printed on four pages 12¢, in the second state, the catalogue expanded to eight pages, and in the last state to 12 pages. Each time the catalogue was entirely recomposed.

John Preston, who established the publishing firm of Preston in 1774, was in partnership with his son, Thomas from 1789 to 1798; from 1798, until c. 1834 the business was continued by Thomas Preston. All catalogues issued by John Preston were engraved.

39 Humphries and Smith, Music Publishing in the British Isles, 263-64.
The catalogue output of the Preston firm offers more challenges than the uniform production of Joseph Dale. To be sure, up to the end of the eighteenth century, Preston’s catalogue production follows contemporary practice. The engraving process is always employed for catalogues printed within music publications and these are of the “growing” variety; the two stand-alone catalogues (PrJ 3 and 4) are printed from letterpress and are more substantial and are single state.

Possibly due to Thomas Preston’s growing influence in the business, the letter-press process becomes noticeably more prominent after 1800. Eleven of the 14 catalogues issued between 1800 and 1820 were from letterpress; ten of these were stand-alone. The one further letterpress catalogue, PrJ 11, may well have been the first produced by this process to have been printed within music items. The three engraved catalogues of these years appeared as usual within music items.

The eleventh letterpress catalogue, PrJ 11, brought out in 1805, poses some questions about other locations in which stand-alone catalogues might be found. The single known exemplar is included in the second printing of A Collection of Songs, Moral, Sentimental, Instructive and Amusing. The Words selected and revised by the Reverend James Plumptre, the Music adapted and Composed by Charles Hague Mus. Doc. and has been counted as a within-music catalogue. However, when the volume first appeared in 1803, printed in London, with the imprint “London: Sold by Preston, ... R. & C. Rivington, ... Hatchard, ... W. Clarke, ... & Asperne, ... Also by J. Deighton, and J. Nicolson, booksellers, and W. Hague, at his music shop, Cambridge, & Knapton, York”, no catalogue was included. The imprint of the second printing (1805) changed to “Cambridge: Printed by Francis Hodson” and the volume now contained a substantial introductory ‘letter’ (52pp) from Plumptre as well as Preston’s catalogue. The catalogue, however, is printed on paper heavier than that used in the volume proper, and has its own pagination. But most significantly, the last page of the catalogue has the imprint “Thomas Collins, Printer, Harvey’s Buildings, Strand”. The implication is that Preston initially had this catalogue printed independently and then forwarded copies to Hodson for binding into the reprint of A Collection of Songs. This arrangement may have been part of the transaction of assigning the volume to Hodson although there is then the question as to whether the circulation of the volume would have been sufficient to outweigh Preston’s expenses of setting and printing the catalogue. On the basis of paper, pagination and imprint it is more tempting to suggest that PrJ 11 was intended as a stand-alone catalogue, a single leaf that possibly was handed out gratis at Preston’s premises. The fate of PrJ 11 cautions that some letterpress catalogues found within volumes may have also existed as stand-alone publications, and that stand-alone catalogues may appear in other situations.

It is also tempting to see PrJ 11 as the predecessor to the letter-press catalogues, PrJ 12, 15, 16, 18, 19 and 20 which form an unusual group of stand-alone catalogues. Like PrJ 11, their format differs noticeably. Printed on octavo-sized sheets they resemble flyers or pamphlets. However, 40 I am indebted to Dr. Rupert Ridgewell, Curator, Music Division, British Library, for kindly supplying details of the imprints of the first and second printings and for the description of the paper types used in the second printing. The sources are BL E. 552. (Hague Collection) 1803, and E. 552. a. (1805).

41 It might be suggested that Hodson had this done at his own expense as part of the settlement, although in that case he surely have done the setting and printing.
42 It cannot have been printed earlier for inclusion in the first printing of A Collection of Songs, as it contains Six Admired Scotch Airs, arranged as Rondos. by Haydn., entered at Stationers’ Hall by Preston on 16 May 1805. A delayed entry date of more than a year seems most unlikely.
43 All found in the Johnson Collection of Ephemera at the Bodleian Library, Oxford
unlike PrJ 11, they list only a handful of music publications but for each there is either a detailed description or a review from a contemporary publication.\textsuperscript{44} Such pamphlet-like publications usually promoted literature. Thomas Preston seems the first to have used the format for advertising music. He had few successors, but Clementi brought out at least seven similar promotional pamphlets overlapping Preston in 1820 and continuing to 1825 (see Catalogue Plate 1 -2).\textsuperscript{45}

Preston's last two letter-press title catalogues of 1825 and 1828, are again different. PrJ 22, was printed within John Danneley's \textit{An Encyclopedia, or Dictionary of Music}, its 12\textsuperscript{th} dimensions according with the book's format. Like Birchall's publication of Callcott's \textit{Music Grammar}, which included his catalogue BR 13, this was a publication outside of Preston's usual sphere of activity. Here too, the entire production, including the catalogue, was entrusted to the printer, in this case, S. Piper of Ipswich. Unlike the situation pertaining to PrJ 11 the uniformity of this publication reduces the possibility that PrJ 22 had an earlier-stand alone existence although a pagination separate from the rest of the volume hints that the catalogue could stand by itself should extra copies have been printed off.\textsuperscript{46}

PrJ 23 is Preston's first and only example of a letter-press catalogue printed within music items and comes hard on the heels of Power's string of letter-press catalogues 1819 - 1824. But, curiously, having tried this increasingly popular process, Preston reverted to engraving for his last catalogues PrJ 24 and PrJ 25 both issued in 1828.

The firm of Goulding is one eminent music-publishing house active throughout almost the entire period of this study. In that time, the firm issued a wide assortment of catalogues using all the principal technical processes available. There are engraved catalogues of the free-hand and punch-work varieties, and letterpress catalogues ranging from single-sheet within-music examples to some of the largest stand-alone type-set catalogues printed at that time.

Their production, however, is erratic. George Goulding entered the music trade in c. 1786, but seems to have issued his first catalogues only in c. 1792. The five catalogues issued sporadically between 1798 and 1803, in part accommodated his purchases of Bland’s stock (GG 3 and 4); GG 3 is a reissue of Bland’s plate (BJ 11). Apart from the two issued in 1808 (GG 7 and 8), Goulding resumed issuing title catalogues only in 1820. Thereafter his production gathered momentum reaching four new catalogues within a single year in 1825, five in 1830 and peaking with six in 1835.

This change in the tempo of production also coincided with a radical change in the technical process employed. 1828/29 seem the watershed years; the stream of engraved catalogues halts. GG 13 is re-issued from the existing plate in 1828 (GG13 o); a single letter-press title catalogue printed within a music item (GG 25) appears in 1829. This latter is the turning point. Goulding abandons engraving for type, and issues 20 new letter-press title catalogues all within music items over the next ten years. Even in the busy 1820s, Goulding had issued only half that number of engraved title catalogues.

From 1834 the firm continued as D’Almaine & Co.

The reasons for Goulding’s apparent neglect of the catalogue in these years are unknown.

It resurfaces again in 1830 (GG 13p) as an aberration in the midst of three new letterpress catalogues.
Goulding had produced catalogues from letter-press as early as 1808, but in the typical book-like, octavo size, stand-alone format associated with this process (GG 7, 1808; GG 11, 1820 and GG 24, 1828). The first is a comprehensive cumulative catalogue, perhaps intended to remedy the paucity of single-sheet catalogues of the preceding five years; the second catalogue likewise may have compensated for the lack of single-sheet catalogues between 1808 and 1820.50

The diversity of Goulding’s catalogues allows us insight into the varying standards of workmanship of the time. Those engraved free-hand seem to represent the highest levels of engraving techniques. GG 6, ‘A Catalogue of the Favorite Operas with the Overtures, Songs, & c. Single’ engraved by Barnes about 1802 (see Catalogue Plate 2-22), confirms the quality of the work seen in his free-hand engraving for Dale (DJ 8, c. 1796-98; see Catalogue Plate 2-21). The technical skill of the Goulding’s punch work catalogues varies considerably (see Catalogue Plates 2-23 and 2-24). The process itself is clumsier; individuality and flair gives way to a more nondescript though speedier production. Arguably the text is easier to read than cursive script, visual appeal loses out to pragmatic commercialism.

It is immediately apparent that the range of fonts, in size and design, available at least by the 1830s renders the letter-press catalogues visually superior to the letter-punch productions (see Catalogue Plate 2-25). The precision of the sharp type fonts replaces the blurred lettering of punch-work. Skilful handling of this resource together with accurate alignment and placements with the letter-press forms produced well-designed catalogue pages of enticing clarity. Whether the publisher had a say in the design of his catalogues is problematic.

50 At 50pp GG11 “Catalogue of Instrumental Music” is substantial in its own right. However it is labelled “Part 1” and may in fact be a volume of a still larger catalogue. If a part II did exist it probably was devoted to vocal music. The smaller catalogue GG 24 is titled “Appendix to the General Catalogue”. Such wording suggests the likelihood of another lost or yet to be located catalogue unless the references is to GG 11.
Barnes’ garland of leaves surrounding the title seems a stylistic trade-mark.
Quality of punch-work of this catalogue is rather clumsy. It may have been an in-house production.
Quality of punch-work of this catalogue is more refined than in Catalogue Plate 2-18.

James Power is one of the first publishers to begin his catalogue production with the letter-press process. After the single example in 1810 he returns to the process in 1819 (PoJ 3) and employs it without a break for all nine catalogues issued over the next twelve years. In this respect his output, though smaller than that of Goulding, predates their change in the printing process. That most of Power’s letter-press catalogues were printed within music items makes his output even more important historically from the technical point of view. Only for two catalogues did Power adopt the more traditional technical pairing of process and layout – the stand-alone letter-press catalogues (PoJ 10 and PoJ 11).

51 It is curious why this particular publisher relied on letterpress as early as 1810s, when other publishers still preferred engraving over letterpress when printing catalogues within music. Power had no association with book publishing and was unlikely to have had letterpress facilities. He may have had some close connection with a particular letter-press printer or his choice of the process may simply be attributed to personal preference or to a keen appreciation of the process of the future.
The intervening years between the letter-press catalogues PoJ 1 and 3 were devoted to seven states of his second catalogue ‘A Catalogue of Vocal Music, by Thomas Moore, Esq. and Sir John Stevenson, Mus. Doc.’ (PoJ 2). They all observe the traditional pairing of process and layout. The first three states were printed within music from engraved plates. The next two states were stand-alone catalogues and printed from letter-press. Two further states (PoJ 2f and 2g) were printed within music items from engraved plates. However, the final five states (PoJ 2h-2l, c. 1820-22) fell within Power’s letter-press/within-music combination. That this switch took place within the course of issuing the same catalogue (rather than the two processes running in parallel for different catalogues) clinches the overthrow of the eighteenth-century pairing in favour of the new pairing of process.

Chappell & Co. began publishing music in 1811; first as Chappell & Co. until 1826, then as S. Chappell until the death of the proprietor Samuel in 1834, and subsequently as Chappell’s. Between 1811 to 1837 the firm issued 19 catalogues in 44 states. All 19 catalogues were printed within music publications, and despite the firm’s extensive output, no large stand-alone catalogues have been located.

Like the output of their rivals, Goulding, Chappell’s catalogues appeared erratically. There was a disjointed production between 1813 and 1821 and a concentrated burst of activity from 1831 to 1834. In between lay ten barren years. These two periods coincided with radical changes in the process used. Five of the catalogues of the earlier period were engraved, including, as might be expected, the thematic catalogue CS 3; they surround three catalogues produced by letter-press (CS 5, 6, and 7) between 1817 and 1818. All nine title catalogues of the 1830s (CS 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19) were type set; the two thematic catalogues (CS 14 and 16) retained the traditional engraving process as did Goulding’s. The conversion of yet another major music publisher to letter-press is unequivocal. Whether it was forced by Goulding’s slightly earlier switch is questionable – it may have been part and parcel of some modernisation of the publishing house in the late 1820s when Samuel Chappell assumed sole charge of the business. It is tempting to suggest there was in-house equipment but most of the letter-press catalogues came from C. Richards of St. Martin’s Lane (see Table 5-a).

52 This figure includes CS 2 (11 states), an engraved catalogue devoted to the works of John Freckleton Burrowes; this was also printed within music published by Goulding, Latour, and Willis & Co. It would seem that Burrowes himself had the plates prepared. In most instances, such catalogues were printed with ‘to be had of all music sellers’ and did not carry the imprint of publishers of items in which the catalogues are to be found.

The early catalogues of Robert Cocks who began publishing music in 1823, are technically conservative. The first 19 of Cocks’ 34 catalogues were all within-music productions and with three exceptions were printed from punched plates. Possibly inspired by Power’s run of letter-press catalogues or Goulding’s letter-press ventures of 1826 (GG 18a) and 1829 (GG 35), Cocks first employed letter-press in 1828 (CR 7 and CR 10). One further letter-press catalogue (CR 17, 1831) was surrounded by more engraved productions. However, at the end of 1832, Cocks completely dropped the engraving process and without exception employed letter-press. Between 1833 and 1837 he brought out 15 new catalogues. This was a phenomenal increase in the rate of production – 1837 alone saw six new catalogues and further states of five existing catalogues.

Only one catalogue (CR 34) is of the stand-alone variety. At 11 pages it is a shadow of the massive productions for Clementi, Chappell and Goulding, and may indicate that the heyday of the cumulative book-like stand-alone catalogue had passed; the technical facility of catalogue production had become such that the “catch up” role of the stand-alone catalogue was no longer required.

Looking across this last group of publishers, it may seem as if Power’s consistent use of letter-press process from 1819 inspired the subsequent thorough-going adoption of this process by Goulding, Chappell, and Cocks. However, as discussed earlier in this chapter, it is more likely that improvements to the quality of type, the ever-growing range of fonts, skill and speed of typesetting, and the new permanency offered by stereotyping were rather more powerful determinants. By the early 1830s, letterpress had almost entirely replaced engraving as the preferred method of catalogue production.

Table 16-a. Title/within-music Letterpress Catalogues – Period of Dominance
CHAPTER 3.

DATING CATALOGUES

Most music published in London during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries was rarely dated, and, not surprisingly, catalogues printed within music publications seldom bear a date. Broadly speaking, there are two ways of dating such catalogues. The first is to date the music item which contains the catalogue. In this way we can arrive at a reasonably close estimate of the actual date of issue of the catalogue. Second, we can date a catalogue from its contents, ascertaining the publication dates of the titles listed in the catalogue itself. Both approaches employ virtually the same techniques and bibliographical tools; seldom will either produce a precise result, but through their employment we can substantially reduce inaccuracy in dating.

This chapter explores various bibliographical tools employed in dating music publications and how these might be combined to achieve precise dating of catalogues. It also discusses their hierarchy in regard to accuracy and reliability in dating. By taking examples from among catalogues issued by various London music publishers, this chapter also illustrates how some evidence may mislead us. Dated catalogues are also considered in this discussion.

There are four internal pieces of evidence or clues to dating a music item, comprising the non-music details which appear on the music print containing the catalogue and on the catalogue itself. These are the watermark date, the publisher’s plate number, the publisher’s imprint, and clues provided by the entries in the catalogue. This last includes the number of entries and references to editions of a work, or the issue number of periodical (serial) publications listed in the catalogues. Although all this internal evidence cannot provide conclusive dates for catalogues, it has proved particularly useful in assigning a chronology for catalogues in multiple states. It is also worth noting that watermark dates and publishers’ plate numbers as dating tools are not equally useful throughout the period of this study. To a certain extent, the decline of one as a means of dating music is overlapped by the increasing usefulness of the other. While the use of watermark dates in paper manufactured after 1820 gradually decreased, thus diminishing their usefulness for dating purposes, more and more music publishers began to adopt plate numbers.

“External evidence” refers to all other facts, data and verifications that influence our decisions in assigning dates, but which stand beyond the music print or catalogue. Among these, the most important are entries in the Stationers’ Hall registers, publication announcements, and reviews in contemporary newspapers and journals. We may also be able to take the date of the first performance of a musical item into consideration as publication would normally appear quite soon after the first performance. This is especially true for excerpts from popular entertainments and operas and their various instrumental arrangements. For particular works of certain composers, other resources such as the business records of publishing houses (inventory ledgers) as well as letters between publishers or between publisher and composer may also be crucial to dating.\(^1\) Although these have been considered in the dating of some catalogues in the Bibliography, they are not discussed in this chapter, as here the main aim is to introduce the four pieces of internal evidence and the three items of external evidence seen as most essential in dating.

I. INTERNAL EVIDENCE

I. INTERNAL EVIDENCE – I) WATERMARK DATES

The general practice concerning watermark usage in England differed considerably from that of the continent. The watermark date requirement was introduced into English paper manufacture in 1794 as a means of regulating taxation. By including the year of manufacture on paper, paper mill owners could claim a refund on export duty.\(^2\) The regulation was abrogated in 1811, but the inclusion of a watermark date (year) in paper continued into the late 1820s. We can find music published in London, printed on paper with watermark dates as late as 1828 or 1829. Jan La Rue in his study of British music papers drew a parallel between French and English paper manufacturers, and hinted that while dated watermarks in French papers are not be trusted as a reliable dating tool, the opposite is true for English papers.\(^3\) Nonetheless, studies of watermark dates have shown that the time lag

\(^1\) Letters from Haydn to Forster, and a contract between Haydn and the publisher are held at the British Library, MS Egerton 2380; A surviving contract between Haydn and the publisher Frederick Augustus Hyde in London, dated August 1796, turned up at Sotheby’s auction on 8 February 1976.

\(^3\) La Rue, “British Music Paper 1770-1820,” 177-78.
between paper manufacture and use could be up to five years. Table 1 substantiates that the time lag between the watermark dates on catalogue source music items and their entry date at Stationers’ Hall was at most four years. In most cases, paper was used within a couple of years from the date of manufacture. Whatever the drawbacks, a watermark date at least gives us the earliest possible year of printing of a music item and any catalogue included with it. In the absence of other evidence, this is often taken as the publication date. It is an understandable move but in the majority of instances this conclusion is unlikely to be accurate for music item and catalogue alike.

I. INTERNAL EVIDENCE – II) PUBLISHER’S IMPRINT

The publisher’s imprint often proves a helpful guide to dating music and catalogues. In the eighteenth and early-nineteenth centuries, music publishers were also music retailers. A current address on music title pages or on catalogues, essential then for informing potential customers where music could be inspected and purchased, is now a welcome tool for dating the output of publishers whose imprint changed frequently owing to the relocation of business premises, acquisition of additional premises, or the formation or dissolution of partnerships.

For example, the publishing firm of Goulding, first established by George Goulding in 1786, went through several changes in partnership, with the imprint changing from G. Goulding to Goulding, Phipps and D’Almaine, then to Goulding, Phipps, D’Almaine & Co, to Goulding, D’Almaine, Potter & Co., to Goulding & D’Almaine, and finally to D’Almaine & Co. That the publishers were at six different premises between 1786 and 1837 and also had three additional premises or branches all at different times meant further changes to the imprint. These changes in imprint can be summarised as:5

When dealing with music and catalogues published by the firm of Goulding, the publisher’s imprint has offered crucial evidence for dating purposes. To take a specific example: GG 11, ‘Catalogue of Instrumental Music’ has the imprint, “Published by Goulding, D’Almaine, Potter and Co., No. 20, Soho Square, and to be had at No. 7, Westmorland Street, Dublin.” The firm was known as Goulding, D’Almaine, Potter and Co. from 1810 to 1823. It had moved to 20 Soho Square from 124 New Bond Street in 1811 and operated a branch at the Dublin address from 1810 to 1816. From this particular combination we can conclude that this catalogue was issued between 1811 and 1816. Similarly, the imprint for GG 6, ‘A Catalogue of Favorite Operas with the Overtures, Song & c.’ reads: “London, Printed by Goulding, Phipps & D’Almaine,” at “45 Pall Mall and 76 St. James’s Street.” Here again, these details allow us to narrow the time frame. The firm was known as Goulding, Phipps & D’Almaine from c. 1798 to c. 1806. The publishers were at 45 Pall Mall from 1798 to c. 1804. However, the additional premises at 76 St. James Street applies only to the period 1800-1804. In this instance, another piece of internal evidence, the watermark date of 1801 in the music print containing the catalogue, allows us to narrow the date of publication to c. 1801-1804.

The firm of Clementi, although located at 26 Cheapside throughout the period concerned, went through several changes in partnership, from Clementi, Banger, Hyde, Collard & Davis, to Clementi, Banger, Collard, Davis & Collard, to Clementi, Collard, Davis & Collard, to Clementi, Collard & Collard, and then to Collard & Collard. In some cases, the publisher’s imprint is just given as 6 Goulding’s advertisement of “New Music” in The Times of 3 April 1804 has the 117 New Bond Street address.

Clementi & Co., but frequently we come across imprints which spell out all the names of the then current partners.

However, there are also instances where the imprint offers little help. Robert Cocks, for example, resided at the same address, took on no additional premises and retained the “& Co” unchanged throughout the years of business, 1823-1837.

As noted earlier, the watermark as a dating tool is limited as it can only provide us with the earliest possible year of printing, and the time lag between watermark date and actual printing may differ by several years. Nevertheless, in many instances in this study, in the absence of plate numbers, a watermark date when used in conjunction with the publisher’s imprint has often provided a reasonably accurate working date.

I. INTERNAL EVIDENCE – III) PLATE NUMBERS

Music publishers would assign a number to an item as it was added to their repertoire. This number was stamped onto the plates when the item was engraved. It was a device that would safely identify all plates engraved for a particular composition at the time of printing, of their storage and then facilitate their retrieval for any subsequent reprinting.\(^7\) It was never intended as a dating mechanism and on its own a plate number offers no clue as to a date of publication for a particular item.

While the use of plate numbers by music publishers was universal on the continent by the 1790s, most London music publishers operating in the last two decades of the eighteenth century did not use plate numbers.\(^8\) Instead, we frequently find an abbreviated version of the title of the work at the foot of each page of music. This catch-title, engraved or punched on each plate served as plate identifier. William Forster was one exception, using plate numbers for this purpose from the early 1780s. His contemporaries did not follow suit.

According to Neighbour and Tyson, plate numbers only came into general use in England from the 1820s.\(^9\) However, plate numbers appear more and more frequently in music published from the \(^7\) Publishers may have maintained some sort of written index of title/plate number for reference. It is possible that a date of preparation, printing or publication accompanied a title/plate number entry in such an index. The Preston receipt reproduced in Chapter 4, p. 149 suggests the presence of such an index. This is implied by “which said plates are particularised in a Book to which this receipt refers” that Preston also obtained in his purchase of Skillern’s plates. The author is obliged to Mr. Peter Ward Jones for highlighting the implication of Preston’s wording.

\(^8\) Oliver Neighbour and Alan Tyson, English Music Publishers' Plate Numbers in the First Half of the Nineteenth Century (London: Faber and Faber, 1965), 10.

1810s. Chappell & Co., who began publishing music in 1811, used plate numbers from the start.\(^{10}\) Other London music publishers to use plate numbers include Birchall & Co. (or Birchall, Lonsdale & Mills), Francis Tatton Latour, the Regent (later, Royal) Harmonic Institution, the firm of Clementi (only from Clementi, Collard and Collard); Robert Cocks & Co., Mori & Lavenu, and Isaac Willis & Co.

At best, a plate number assigns an item a precise position within a publisher's output. Seen in this numerical sequence, the plate numbers of a publisher can assist in producing a chronological sequence of the firm's issue of catalogues and/or of the states of a particular catalogue. Simply stated, the higher the plate number the more recent the publication as publishers proceeded in numerical sequence with each successive publication. Hence a catalogue issued within a music item with a low plate number almost certainly appeared before catalogues included in items with higher plate numbers. States of a single catalogue can be chronologically ordered on this same premise.

Obviously, plate numbers can only assist in sequencing catalogues that appeared within music items. They have no relevance for stand-alone catalogues. While plate numbers by themselves allow us to devise a basic chronology of catalogues, their significance as a dating tool increases immeasurably if they are used in conjunction with two external pieces of evidence - the entry registers at Stationers' Hall and advertisements in the contemporary press.

The two authoritative bibliographies\(^ {11} \) of English music publishers' plate numbers demonstrate the value of these external sources. The authors’ dating of the plates numbers of a large number of firms has been based particularly on entry dates of music items at Stationers’ Hall.\(^ {12} \)

I. INTERNAL EVIDENCE – IV A) DATING BY CLUES PROVIDED BY CATALOGUE ENTRIES

The expansion of a catalogue usually indicates later states, especially for engraved catalogues. However, the number of titles in a catalogue does not always provide an absolute measure. The total number of items may not increase as some works may have been taken out of the catalogue, owing to lack of demand or popularity, or simply to make room for more recent publications. Nonetheless

\(^{10}\) Chappell & Co.’s A Duett for two Performers on the Piano Forte, in which is introduced the Air of ‘Sul Margin d’un rio,’ with Variations, by T. Latour. (Pl no. 1); and A Sonata for the Piano Forte, in which are introduced the Airs of ‘Rule Britannia,’ and ‘In my Cot th’ small’s my store,’ by J. B. Cramer, Op. 49 (Pl no. 2), were both entered at Stationers’ Hall, 8 January 1811.

\(^{11}\) Neighbour and Tyson, English Music Publishers' Plate Numbers; Parkinson, Victorian Music Publishers: An Annotated List.

\(^{12}\) Not every plate number is dated; dates for plate numbers enclosing a sequence of numbers are given. The implication is that approximate date can be assigned to the intermediary numbers.
except on rare occasions, the number of entries has proved useful in establishing the chronological order of various states of the same catalogue.

I. INTERNAL EVIDENCE – IV b) DATING OF CATALOGUES THROUGH PERIODICAL PUBLICATIONS

The dating of catalogues can also be assisted by observing their listings of ‘periodical’ (or series) publications. If such serial publications of music came out at regular intervals it should be possible to assign a quite precise date to a catalogue in which they are included. John Bland was to the fore as a publisher of periodical collections; issuing five such collections between c. 1785 and c. 1794 – ‘Periodical Italian Songs,’ ‘Bland’s Harpsichord Collection, without accompaniments,’ ‘Le tout Ensemble for piano with accompaniments,’ ‘Duetts for two performers on one piano forte,’ and ‘Bland’s Collection of Catches, Glees, Canons, Canzonets, Madrigals, & c.’

The contents of these collections were set out in the following states of Bland’s catalogue, ‘(Page 2.) Catalogue of Harpsichord Music’ and ‘(Page 3) Catalogue of Vocal Music’ (BIJ 9).

According to Bland’s statement13 in his thirteenth catalogue devoted to his Harpsichord Collection, “Publish’d the 1st day of every Month”, we can assume that at least one of his periodical collections was issued at regular intervals. We also know the first number of the harpsichord collection was published in January 1790, as this is stated in the same catalogue. From this evidence we should be able to assign a date of publication of July/August 1790 to BIJ 9b, and December 1790/January 1791 to BIJ 9c, which contains a further five issues of the Harpsichord Collection. BIJ 9d which contains four additional numbers should then be dated four months later, April/May 1791, and BIJ 9e dated to February/March 1792. From then on the author’s assigned dates of issue for BIJ 9f and 9g suggests 13 This appears just below the catalogue title.

Bland did not update this particular catalogue promptly. BIJ 13b assigned to June 1792 lists 30 items of the Harpsichord Collection. Bland leaves the figure at 26 in 9f and 9g. For his other collections, the term ‘periodical’ was loosely used: issues were made in a rather haphazard from-time-to-time basis. Nevertheless, the inclusion of regularly-published items in a sequence of catalogues can still be regarded as a useful device for determining the chronological order of the catalogues.

Sometimes the dating of a catalogue is facilitated by reference to different editions of a work listed. Willis & Co’s third catalogue (WI 3) lists a number of works with specific reference to editions. Taking the third state (WI 3c) and the fourth state (WI 3d) of the catalogue as examples (Table 7), establishing their chronological sequence was aided by the editions listed in each, even without considering external evidence.

II. EXTERNAL EVIDENCE

As illustrated above, internal evidence alone cannot be an absolute guide to dating. Therefore we must incorporate other evidence to arrive at precise dating of catalogues. For this external evidence we can turn to three sources – the registers of Stationers’ Hall; publication advertisements in newspapers, such as the Morning Chronicle, The Times and the Morning Post; and reviews of publications in music and non-music journals. Such external evidence may well reinforce or consolidate our dating. Theoretically we may expect a sequence of all three, with the date of entry at Stationers’ Hall being followed by an announcement of publication, and then by reviews. The dates of the first two may follow in quick succession although in some cases there are considerable time lapses. Almost invariably, reviews follow at some distance.

II. EXTERNAL EVIDENCE – 1) THE STATIONERS’ HALL REGISTERS

The evidence of the Stationers’ Hall registers assists the dating any particular catalogue and in determining the sequence of states of a catalogue. Comparison of different states of a catalogue identifies items added in a particular state. On the basis of the entry dates of these items in the Stationers’ Hall registers it becomes possible to narrow the publication of that state to a month or season.

Joseph Dale’s fifth catalogue exists in eight different states (see Table 8). The second state, 5b, contains 14 new publications, of which nine were registered at Stationers’ Hall on 2, 23 and 24 November, 13 December 1792, and 7 January 1793. Neither of the two new items introduced in the third state (DJ 5c) was entered at Stationers’ Hall; however, the source music items which contain the third state were entered 24 December 1792 and 7 January 1793. The fourth state (DJ 5d) appeared in publications entered between January and May 1793. The fifth state (DJ 5e) contains an item entered in June 1793 and was printed within an item entered in the same month. The sixth state (DJ 5f) contains an item entered in July 1793. The seventh state (DJ 5g) was found within two music items entered in August 1793. The last state contains an item entered in November 1793, and was found in a music item entered in March 1794.

Then DJ 5a may be dated ‘late-autumn 1792’; DJ 5b, ‘winter 1792-93’; DJ 5c, early 1793; DJ 5d, ‘spring 1793’; DJ 5e, ‘June/July 1793’; DJ 5f, ‘July/August 1793’; DJ 5g, ‘autumn 1793’; and DJ 5h, ‘spring 1794’.

The Stationers’ Hall registers proved useful in dating the states of a catalogue devoted to the works of Auguste Bertini, and at the same time, the registers demonstrate how entry dates can inform plate numbers. In this case, Bertini’s use of a large number of publishers allows us to trace quite precisely the entries of the contents of the various states of the catalogue. Bertini seems to have given only one or two works to a particular publisher, and, as they became ready, had them entered at Stationers’ Hall. The sequence of plate numbers matches the chronological entry at the Hall, so there seems to have been little delay between printing (and publishing) and entry. From Table 9-a, all compositions entrusted to Mori & Lavenu were entered on 3 May 1831 (plate numbers B.A. 3 to 6); that prepared by Boosey on 14 July (plate number B.A. 7). Only the two items given to Welsh (plate numbers B.A. 8 and 9) are out of chronological order. Bertini must have intended them to be ready before those given to Lonsdale & Mills (plate numbers B.A. 10, 11, 12).

Bertini took responsibility for the catalogue plate; the same plate was used throughout all states with new items being punched in. The first state of 14 items must have been prepared by the beginning of the October as it is contained within items with plate numbers B.A. 13 and 14 that were entered on 3 and 11 October 1831. These two items were included within the catalogue itself, but as a last minute additions, indicated by slight changes in engraving style (see Catalogue Plate 5-4). The second state must have been ready by 11 October; the third state by 13 December, even though it included an item that was only to be entered after 11 January 1832. When that item did appear it included the fourth state of the catalogue BA 1d, Bertini apparently having the plate updated in the immediately preceding weeks. This anticipation of catalogues continued in BA 1d and 1e, prepared before 11 January and 1 February 1832 respectively. The seventh state, BA 1g, was not anticipated and was ready by 2 March 1832, although the new items it contained were not all entered until 13 April. The next state likewise included items printed only after it had been prepared by 6 July 1832. The final state, BA 1i was prepared by 1 November, with some of its items not entered until 17 December.

The anticipatory announcements characteristics of several catalogues reflect Bertini’s keen sense of promotion as a self-publishing composer. His concern for prompt entry at the Hall means that in this instance, plate number and entry dates have such close correlation as to pinpoint accurately the date of any composition and each state of the catalogue.

The use of external evidence helps explain the puzzling plate number seen in the source item which contains the second state of Robert Cocks’ tenth catalogue, ‘New Piano Forte Works by Carl Czerny’ (CR 10b). This catalogue has been located in the music item (Fantaisie Brillante pour le Piano Forte sur des Thème de l’Opera, Semiramide de Rossini, by François Hünten, Op. 29) printed by Cocks with the plate number 486 as well as within the firm’s eleven-page stand-alone catalogue (CR 34) issued in 1837. Although without a publication date, CR 34, can be dated on the basis of the publishers’ statement on the title page: ‘Messrs. Cocks and Co. respectfully beg leave to return their warmest thanks to their numerous Friends and the Public in general, for the very liberal patronage and support with which they have been honoured during the last fourteen years.’ The firm commenced in 1823; ‘the last fourteen years,’ would assign the catalogue to 1837.

From the Stationers’ Hall registers we know that Hünten’s Op. 29, with the plate number 486, was entered on 4 October 1828. Among the new items in the second state of CR 10 are Charles Czerny’s ‘Souvenir de Contemporains, six Brilliant Rondos’ issued with plate numbers 2785 to 2790. The issue of Hünten’s Op. 29, containing catalogue CR 10b can only be a reprint and in this instance, we are fortunate to have found the same catalogue printed within a source which can be positively dated to 1837. However, had we located only a copy of this catalogue within Hünten’s Op. 29, and relied solely on the source music plate number for dating, via its Stationers’ Hall entry date, we could have assigned a much earlier date to the catalogue than the actual date of impression. As is evident from this example, much of the music for this period was printed from engraved plates, with their advantage of being able to be reprinted on demand. While the music itself was so reproduced, publishers always inserted their latest catalogues into the reprints.

15 Conglomerate catalogue in 11 parts. For description see Bibliography, CR 34.
16 The earlier state of this catalogue (CR 10a) appeared within Hünten’s ‘Deux Rondeaux, Op. 42, No. 2, Mathilde de Shabran, in F,’ printed with plate number 702, and entered at Stationers’ Hall, 15 June 1830. Reliance on the numerical sequence of plate numbers alone would have had the second state placed before the first state.
Non-chronological use of plate numbers can also mislead. The catalogue ‘Index to the Dramatic Airs’ (RH 4) published by the Royal Harmonic Institution contains a series of airs arranged as rondos for the piano. Because the publisher assigned a single plate number, 166, to the series, all items although spread over three years, were published with the same plate number (see Table 5). The catalogue, which appeared within the No. 17 of the series, could easily be misdated by two years. However, the Institution seems to have entered each item at the Stationers’ Hall in sequence, and apparently quite promptly. These dates overcome the problem of the single plate number and provide a quite reliable dating not only for each number in the series but also for the catalogue. Once again, the internal evidence of plate number meaningful only in an external context.

Some instances, however, are more complicated and pose warnings against complete reliance even on plate numbers and Stationers’ Hall entry dates used together. Chappell’s catalogue ‘New English Songs, & Duets’ (CS 18) exists in two states. The first state (CS 18a) containing 167 entries has been found within 23 different items, with plate numbers, 3963, 4216, 4234, 4244, 4311, 4312, 4335, 4337, 4355, 4356, 4357, 4396, 4400, 4421, 4454, 4461, 4468, 4473, 4476, 4480, 4481, 4483 and 4486. According to Neighbour and Tyson, Chappell’s plate numbers reached 3942 in January 1832, 4121 in 17 The paper is watermarked 1817, which further confuses rather than assists clarification.

December 1832, 4191 in September 1833, 4244 in December 1833, 4345 in January 1834, and 4550 in December 1834. From this, it may be construed that the first state of CS 18 was in use from early 1832, and printed repeatedly into August 1834.

That the catalogue is within Rophino Lacy’s adaptation for voice and piano with English text of On Yonder Rock Reclining from Auber’s Fra Diavolo, plate number 3963, suggests a preparation and printing date for the catalogue of early January 1832. Although this particular item was not entered at Stationers’ Hall, other excerpts from the opera adapted by Lacy were entered on 16 and 17 January 1832. Although this particular item was not entered at Stationers’ Hall, other excerpts from the opera adapted by Lacy were entered on 16 and 17 January 1832.

It is well possible that On Yonder Rock was also published in January 1832. However, other items included in CS 18a but also carrying CS 18a were only entered at Stationers’ Hall on 7 December 1833. It would seem then that CS 18a should be dated almost two years later; Chappell apparently reprinted On yonder rock near the end of 1833, inserting the latest catalogue to hand.

However, using the external evidence of the dates on which reviews of the most recently-published items in CS 18a appeared in The Harmonicon, the above scenario which has already called into question the reliability of a plate number and Stationers’ Hall entry dates for dating purposes, alters again. The review dates show that Chappell seems not to have entered publications at the Hall as soon as they were published, but waited until he had a batch of new publications before sending them for entry. Table 3-a shows that in some cases, the time lag between the publication of the review of an item and its entry date at Stationers’ Hall was up to five months. The enigma is the date Chappell sent review copies to The Harmonicon. If a month is allowed for the review process to have taken place and the text set in type, CS 18a may have been issued in August 1833; if all of these items were dispatched together, the date of the catalogue might be pushed back at least to May.

19 “I don’t object,” Matrimonial Duet, from Auber’s Fra Diavolo, adapted by Rophino Lacy (listed in CS 18a), entered at Stationers’ Hall, 16 January 1832; “Proudly and wide my Standard flies,” adapted by Lacy (listed in CS 18a), entered at Stationers’ Hall, 17 January 1832; “Oh Hour of Joy,” adapted by Lacy (Pl no. 3978; listed in CS 18a), entered at Stationers’ Hall, 17 January 1832. A year earlier Chappell had published five arrangements by Lacy of other numbers from the opera. These were all arrangements for voice and guitar and were entered at Stationers’ Hall between 18 and 21 January 1831. On yonder rock was among them; that arrangement had the plate number of 3803.

20 That On Yonder Rock is the only source item to be listed in the catalogue supports the hypothesis that the catalogue was issued at a later date.

21 “Most recently-published” on the basis of the highest plate numbers of items in CS 18a
The second state of the same catalogue (CS 18b) is one of the few examples of catalogues which bear the date, month and year of issue: “30,6,1834”, we may assume it was set in type by 30 June 1834. It has been found within compositions printed with plate numbers 4377, 4475, 4485, 4488, 4490, 4493, 4494, 4496 and 4506. The two lowest plate numbers (4377 and 4475) are anomalies since they fall within the number range of plate numbers of source items containing CS 18a, the previous state.
The first item was entered at Stationers’ Hall 8 November 1834, and the second on 28 August 1834. Of the other source music items for CS 18b Lay of the Sailor’s Bride (Pl no. 4494) was entered on 28 August 1834; Oh! For my Native Northern Land (Pl no. 4488), Wilt thou be my Bride (Pl no. 4490), Strain of my Childhood! (Pl no. 4496), Summer and Winter (Pl no. 4506) were all entered on 8 November 1834; and Hark! ’Tis the Waterfall (Pl no. 4493) was entered on 7 November 1834.

If we rely on plate numbers and entry dates at Stationers’ Hall alone, we may conclude that when the catalogue was updated in June 1834, the publisher included works in preparation (4454, 4461, 4468, 4473, 4475, 4476, 4480, 4481, 4483, 4485, 4486, 4488, 4489, 4490, 4493 and 4494) which were expected to be released within the following six months. However, Chappell’s advertisement of new publications in The Times in May 1834 includes seven works (in CS 18b) that were entered at Stationers’ Hall on 28 August that year. On this evidence, our conclusion based on plate numbers and entry dates at Stationers’ Hall may be misguided; CS 18b may represent works already published by June 1834.

Table 4. Plate numbers of new items in CS 18b

22 The date appears at the foot (right corner) of CS 18b. Chappell’s other dated catalogues are discussed on p. 134

23 Even without this problem, the entry of 4377 later than 4475 at Stationers' Hall further questions the wisdom of a direct match between plate number sequence and the chronological sequence of entry dates.

*Source music, but not listed in CS 18b.

Of those 16 items apparently printed post June 1834 on the basis of entry dates at Stationers' Hall, seven have now been shown as published before June (see Table 4). Presumably, they were included in a mopping-up operation for a large entry at the Hall on 28 August, which included another four items likely to have been printed before June (4454, 4476, 4486 and 4489). A further five items (four included in CS 18b) were entered on 7 and 8 November. These may have been printed after 28 August. Significantly they are source items for CS 18b and might have been expected to appear after the letterpress was ready. However, they do appear within the catalogue itself, perhaps indicating they were prepared alongside the catalogue but that their printing was delayed. They were already allocated plate numbers as all November items have numbers lower than that allotted one source item entered at the Hall on 28 August (plate number 4494). If we assume Chappell used an accurate sequence of plate number allocation, these November items must also have been printed before 28 August - or allotted numbers but not printed.

The foregoing discussion shows that any one item containing CS 18a would allow this state to be dated (on the seemingly safe basis of internal evidence - the plate number - checked against external evidence - the entry date at Stationers' Hall) to 7 December 1833, 22 January 1834, 28 April 1834 or 28 August 1834. Likewise, any item containing CS 18b could have this state dated to 28 August, 7

24 The Challenge (Cooke’s adaptation of Herold’s Le Pré aux Clercs) was premiered in London on 1 April 1834; Bruce Carr, ‘Cooke, Thomas Simpson’, Grove Music Online ed. L. Macy (Accessed 31 October 2007) <http://www.grovemusic.com>
November or 8 November 1834 – as well as to 30 June 1834 on the basis of the date on the catalogue page itself. A cross check with further external evidence, advertisement and review dates, eliminates at least some of this ambiguity, placing CS 18a to between June and 7 December 1833 and CS 18b to between 30 June and 28 August 1834.

The Chappell example is a cautionary tale. It shows the limitations of plate numbers as a dating tool even when backed by external evidence. It also shows that the external evidence should be well scrutinised.

Certainly, music entries in the Stationers’ Hall registers have proved helpful for dating publishers’ catalogues, either supplying dates close to the publication of works listed in the catalogues, or supplying such a date for the source item, as seen earlier in the case of Cocks’ catalogue CR 10b. However, as with other items of internal and external evidence, the evidence of Stationers’ Hall registers cannot be unreservedly applied and left unchallenged. For dating purposes, the usefulness of an entry date depends on a publisher entering an item very close to its date of publication. That this cannot be taken for granted is illustrated by Chappell’s actions. If that firm’s approach to registering was determined by output and convenience then as other publishers increased their output such lump registering was likely to have become more and more common and entry dates as a basis for dating more and more unreliable.

It is also apparent that the Hall registers represent only a portion of what was published in London. Herein lies a further limitation. Some publishers such as Joseph Dale for instance, entered most of their publications, and a search of the registers yields fruitful results. Longman and Broderip is another eighteenth-century firm that entered publications regularly. In the nineteenth century, publishers such as Clementi, Goulding, James Power, Samuel Chappell and the Royal Harmonic Institution also regularly feature in the registers.

Not all works entered at Stationers’ Hall are to be found in publishers’ catalogues documented in this study. This may suggest that there are more catalogues still to be located, or, if not, that publishers

25 This holds whether the object is to date the item or a catalogue contained within an item. Any one source item may not represent the publication date of a catalogue but accurate dating of several source items will at least pinpoint a restricted time frame within which a catalogue was published.

were not consistently listing all their publications in catalogues. On the other hand, not all the works listed in catalogues are found in the Hall registers. In this case, the answer is more straightforward.
Publishers simply did not enter all their publications; usually entry was reserved for works that they thought needed protection from piracy. The publisher or proprietor had to pay to have works registered at Stationers’ Hall. In addition, there was the mandatory requirement of submitting five, nine, or eleven copies, according to changes made to the Copyright Act. A certificate of entry could be obtained only at additional cost. It was not always to the publisher’s commercial advantage to enter publications at Stationers’ Hall. Perhaps it is not surprising that only a small portion of music bearing the phrase “Entered at Stationers’ Hall,” on the title pages is to be found in the registers.
Often, this was only a cautionary phrase printed on music title pages regardless of entry at Stationers’
Hall.

II. EXTERNAL EVIDENCE – II) ANNOUNCEMENTS AND REVIEWS OF PUBLICATIONS

Even for music publishers whose names are absent from the registers at Stationers’ Hall, their publications may be readily found advertised in contemporary newspapers and journals. Daily newspapers, such as the Daily Universal Register (January 1785-March 1788), continued as The Times (1788-to date), and the Morning Chronicle (1790-1821), contain numerous announcements of publications variously headed, ‘This day is published,’ ‘This Month will be published,’ ‘Just published’. These are publishers’ advertisements, which give titles and prices, usually the names of the composers, and of course, the addresses for purchase.

This apparently quite innocent wording poses problems. There is no way such headings can be verified and to take them at face value can lead to erroneous dating. While a publisher may have wording the caption of his advertisement in good faith, delay in insertion on the part of the newspaper publisher makes the wording “This day is published” particularly, inaccurate. At times, the reporting of events of national importance precluded any advertisements appearing for several days; at other times, the amount of space devoted to advertisements could be severely curtailed and priority of insertion lay beyond an advertiser’s control. Even under normal conditions we find variance in the dates of appearance of the same advertisements across newspapers. Broderip and Wilkinson’s advertisement of five items under the heading “This day is published” appeared in the Morning Chronicle of 12 March 1801 and in The Times on 14 March; the firm’s larger advertisement of “New

28 The registers could be searched, upon payment of a fee, to confirm entry. Perhaps few were concerned enough to make the effort.
Piano-Forte Music, Just published …” appeared in the former newspaper on 23 November 1801 but in the latter only on 4 December.

This aside, there is the problem of these announcements of immediate publication heading well-spaced repeat advertisements. In 1801 the Morning Chronicle carried 58 announcements of music publications; The Times carried 33 advertisements. In each newspaper, a few of these advertisements were repeated unaltered two or three times. For example, that inserted by the New Music Warehouse ran on 15 May and 8 June in the Morning Chronicle, the heading "This day is published" and contents remaining unchanged.

There is the further complication that a music publisher’s apparently new advertisement was likely to include items that had appeared in an earlier advertisement, yet this later announcement would be headed "Just published" or "This day is published". Broderip and Wilkinson’s five-item advertisement of 12 March 1801 included four items advertised on 9 February and 9 March. Their ten-item advertisement of 1 May included seven items previously advertised; one item had appeared in three previous advertisements, the earliest being on 9 February. Birchall repeated his advertisement in the Morning Chronicle of 25 March on 2 May, retaining eight of the nine items and adding two further publications. Confusingly, having repeated their advertisement of 15 May unchanged on 8 June, the New Music Warehouse inserted it again on 15 June but with an additional item. On the other hand, Goulding, Phipps and D’Almaine recast their advertisement of 27 February on 25 March, repeating that version unaltered on 10 April. This somewhat tangled mix of new advertisements, repeated but unchanged advertisements, and advertisements mingling new items with items transferred from advertisement to advertisement, is set out in Table 10.

It is instructive to look at the implications of all this on the dating of two specific publications. The grand ballet of Barbara and Allen, published by Broderip and Wilkinson, was advertised in the Morning Chronicle as “This day is published” on 12 May 1801, and as “Just published” on 1 May and 23 November. It was also advertised as “This day is published” in The Times on 14 March and under the heading “Just published” on 1 May, 23 July, 29 August and 4 December. Similarly, La Colombe retrouvée, by Von Esch, published by Broderip and Wilkinson, was repeatedly advertised in the Morning Chronicle and The Times. It appears in the Morning Chronicle, 9 February, within a list of 32 items headed “New Music, just published by Broderip and Wilkinson”, and is one of seven items carried over into the ten-item advertisement of 1 May. It is also included in the advertisement

29 This was the new item added to the four items brought over from the firm’s advertisement of 9 February. Some advertisements also announced forth-coming publications. Broderip & Wilkinson’s advertisement in the Morning Chronicle on 9 March was headed “In a few days will be published the new ballet of Barbara and Allen” – an accurate prediction in this instance.
“This day is published,” on 12 March,\(^{30}\) and is among the 22 items of “New Piano-Forte Music, Just published by Broderip and Wilkinson,” advertised on 23 November. This same item was announced in The Times, on 14 March, 1 May and 4 December.

If we combine the advertisements in both newspapers, we have eight possibilities for dating each of Barbara and Allen and La Colombe retrouvée. These examples reinforce the need for a very thorough search of newspapers before any pronouncement of an approximate date of publication can be made. Unobserved, repeated advertisements or the transference of an item from advertisement to advertisement may see its dating skewed by months or even a year.

If this issue has serious bibliographical connotations for the dating of a music item, it has even more far-reaching consequences for the dating of any catalogue contained in a multiple-advertised item. Of the above examples, only La Colombe retrouvée contained a catalogue – BrW 2. Should that publication have been the only source item, or relied on without a search for another source item, the catalogue could have been misdated by up to ten months.\(^{31}\) If more than one state of a catalogue should be involved, an inadequate search for multiple-advertised items could lead to a switching of dates, or worse, to the omission of a state. Hypothetically, a music item first advertised in March may be located only in a repeated advertisement inserted in October. By then it is possible that the item contains the second state of a catalogue; so knowledge of the first state of the catalogue as well as the earlier publication date of the music item is then lost. The second state is regarded as the first state which becomes associated with the publication date of the second state. Happily in the case of La Colombe retrouvée, no change of state of BrW 2 occurred.

Music journals such as the QMMR, and The Harmonicon featured reviews of new music publications in every issue. The Monthly Magazine, as well as covering a wide array of topics from arts, science, patents, politics, and agriculture to current bankruptcies, dividends, deaths and marriages, also included reviews of new music publications in every issue, except the half-yearly supplements. The Harmonicon and the Monthly Magazine were issued monthly, while the QMMR, as its title suggests, was issued four times a year.\(^32\) Because of the frequency of issue, reviews of two works which were perhaps published only a few days apart could appear with a considerable gap. While these belated reviews help little in dating precisely the appearance of source items for catalogues or works listed in the catalogues, music journals offer more assistance through their listing (without reviews) of music “Just published” and of “Forthcoming Publications”.

From time to time, reviews can offer unsuspected benefits. As catalogues became more complex and specialised as the nineteenth century progressed, entries in catalogues came to include more than the name of the composer, title and price of each item. Such supplementary information in the catalogues is often an additional aid in dating. Among the stand-alone pamphlet-type promotional aids in the Johnson Collection at the Bodleian Library, is a catalogue of two octavo-sized pages devoted to the works of J. F. Burrowes (CM 5), entitled ‘Just Published, by Chappell and Co. 50, New Bond Street, and Clementi and Co, 26, Cheapside, and may also be had at all the Principal Music-Shops’ (see Catalogue Plate 3-1). Although issued without the date, the catalogue carries excerpts of dated and undated reviews from the contemporary press. The first title in the catalogue is the second edition of Burrowes’ Thorough Bass Primer. The reviews are those of the QMMR undated, but with the issue number ‘III’ (which appeared in 1818) and the London Literary Gazette, dated ‘September 11, 1819.’ For the second title in the catalogue, the second edition of Burrowes’ The Piano-Forte Primer, the dated reviews are from three different sources: Monthly Review, March 1818; Literary Gazette, 7 February, 1818; Repository of Arts, 1818. Although other items in the catalogue do not carry reviews, the printed excerpts are sufficient to confirm that the catalogue could not have appeared before 11 September 1819.

\(^{32}\) Precise dating of each issue of the journal has been problematic. Although the journal was intended to be brought out quarterly, this clearly was not the case. Forty issues were published from autumn 1818 to 1830.
II. EXTERNAL EVIDENCE – III) COPAC: THE UK AND IRISH ACADEMIC AND NATIONAL LIBRARY CATALOGUE

One further dating tool now available to present-day scholars is COPAC, the merged online catalogue of 24 research libraries in the United Kingdom and Ireland. This catalogue makes possible a ready comparison of the publication dates assigned to a music publication by the holding libraries. It is true that dates assigned by holding libraries result from the application of tools already discussed in this chapter. Nonetheless, publication dates supplied in library catalogues vary in accuracy and detail. Some of these provide a watermark date as the publication date; others date with reference to entries at Stationers’ Hall, publishers’ plate numbers, or to Répertoire International des Sources Musicale.
(RISM). Still others do not give specific dates at all, but leave an open “18—” dating. Some publication dates in holding libraries’ catalogues are based on the publishers’ imprints alone, so that we find “between 1801 to 1810” offered for a publication with the imprint of “Clementi, Banger, Hyde, Collard & Davis.” However, it is the amalgamation and integration of information provided by the 24 libraries that make the COPAC catalogue valuable. Much can be gleaned by comparing the date of publication and the basis for this dating supplied by different libraries.

III. DATED CATALOGUES

A not insignificant number of catalogues of varying types offer the apparently helpful inclusion of a date (year) in their titles or at the close of the contents (see Table 11), but it soon becomes evident that a date printed in a catalogue can have more than one meaning.

Large stand-alone catalogues are nearly always cumulative retrospective catalogues, listing works published by a publisher from as early as the inception of the firm, yet some are dated. For instance, Goulding, Phipps, D'Almaine & Co.’s ‘Catalogue of Instrumental and Vocal Music’ (GG 7) is dated ‘1808’ on its title page, Goulding & D’Almaine’s catalogue of ‘Appendix to the General Catalogue of Music, Vocal and Instrumental, by the most Eminent Masters, English, Italian, and French’ (GG 24) has ‘1828’ on the title page; Clementi, Collard and Collard’s catalogue ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music’ (CM 9) has ‘1823’ on its title page.

In these instances, the date is not an indicator of items published in the designated year, but represents the state of affairs up to that year. There may have been the intention that a succeeding catalogue would include only publications produced after that date, so creating a series of catalogues. This is implied by Goulding's two catalogues. The items in that dated 1828 go back to 1810 making it the successor to the catalogue dated 1808. Alternatively, if a succeeding dated catalogue also incorporated the entire output of publications, it would be through the stated years implicit that the later catalogue was more comprehensive and authoritative.\textsuperscript{34}

Annual catalogues – catalogues ostensibly issued to cover the publications brought out for a specified year – should be treated with particular caution. First, there is the implication that these cover publications brought out in the specified year and that these are all “new” (i.e. never-before-published) compositions. Longman and Broderip’s catalogue, ‘1792. Longman and Broderip's Annual Catalogue of New Music’ (LB 16) is a case in point. This catalogue has elements of the cumulative category as it includes items published and entered at Stationers’ Hall as early as 1786 and 1787, \textsuperscript{35} and even if these items were reprinted in 1792, they can scarcely be claimed as “new music”.

Second, even when issued in sequence, annual catalogues, despite their titles, could still include items dating back over several years. Broderip & Wilkinson’s ‘Additional Catalogue of New Music for 1806,’ (BrW 4), succeeded by their catalogue ‘for the year 1807,’ (BrW 5) and then by Wilkinson & Co’s ‘Additional Catalogue for the year 1808’ (BrW 7) and ‘Catalogue of New Music for the year 1809’ (BrW 8) all seem a straight-forward sequence of “annual” catalogues. The first, at least, contained works published under the partnership of Longman and Broderip (1776-1798), \textsuperscript{36} as well as works published and entered at Stationers’ Hall in 1801.\textsuperscript{37} The contents of the subsequent catalogues prove to be much more accurate. But the aberrant BrW 4 brings them into question while it itself gives no warning that its contents range widely.

Third, there is evidence that annual catalogues could appear in several states as the year progressed. All of the above catalogues have been found in multiple states. BrW 4 exists in three different states:

\textsuperscript{34} Obviously, this practical reason now has historical advantages. Some items in the first dated catalogue may have been discarded from the second; determining and evaluating a publisher's output solely on the latter would lead to erroneous conclusions.

\textsuperscript{35} Three Quintets, by Pleyel, Op. 8, was entered at Stationers’ Hall, 5 December 1786; Six Trios, by François Devienne, Op. 19, entered at Stationers’ Hall, 31 March 1787; and Three Quintets, by Pleyel, Op. 9, entered at Stationers’ Hall, 30 April 1787.

\textsuperscript{36} Three Sonatas for the Piano forte, by Louis von Esch, Op. 13, entered at Stationers’ Hall by Longman and Broderip, 28 March 1794.

\textsuperscript{37} Military Divertimento for the Piano forte, with Accompaniments, by L. von Esch, entered at Stationers’ Hall 5 July 1801; \textit{Le Retour De Wandsworth}, a favourite Sonata, with Accompaniments, by L. von Esch, entered at Stationers’ Hall, 15 July 1801; Impromptu, a Duo for the piano forte, by L. von Esch, entered at Stationers’ Hall 4 November 1801.
(growing from 87 to 95, and then to 105 items) which can only have been issued at three different times during the year. For the bibliographer, only the last state of each catalogue (BrW 4c, 5c, 7c, and BrW 8b) should be considered a complete retrospective listing of works issued during the specified year.

Of course, there are a handful of dated catalogues more precise both in their chronological coverage and their contents. For example, there is Longman and Broderip’s ‘Catalogue of New Music, published in London, & c. Since the Commencement of the Year, 1779, to the Month of September inclusive’\(^{38}\) (LB 1).

Some single-folio sheet catalogues issued by Samuel Chappell also have full dates of impression. However, it is not clear why the same publisher would include the date, month and year of impression on some catalogues, yet omit dates on other similar catalogues. Chappell’s first catalogue, ‘Index to the National Melodies’ (CS 1) is dated ‘October 1\(^{st}\) 1813’; ‘New Italian and French Vocal Music,’ (CS 17a) is dated ‘26, 8, [18]33’; the third state of the same catalogue (CS 17c) has ‘30, 6, [18]34’; and the ‘New English Songs, Duets, & c.’ (CS 18b) is dated ‘30, 6, [18]34’. These dates always appear in the lower right corner. In Chappell’s nineteenth catalogue, ‘New English Vocal Music,’ the date has been caught up in binding, and now shows only the date and the month of issue ‘6, 12’.\(^{39}\) In other cases, it is very likely that dates have been lost in trimming when individual sheet music items have been bound within a volume. Ironically, Chappell’s earlier catalogues have generous margins but lack dates of impression.

As outlined above, a “dated catalogue” refers to catalogues which have dates in their titles, or included elsewhere, but we may also include catalogues printed within music items that are either dated on the title page or in some sort of prefatory annotation. Dates assigned to catalogues by such means are accurate provided a publisher inserted his latest catalogues in these items.

Bland & Weller issued a series of catalogues titled ‘The Following Songs Sung this Season at Vauxhall-Gardens; to be had Single, Exclusive of the songs in this Book.’ All the songs were composed by James Hook (1746-1827). The catalogues themselves are not dated, but this is remedied by the music items in which the catalogues appear being consistently dated; catalogue BW 1 always appears in items dated 1794; 1795 (BW 2), 1796 (BW 3) and 1797 (BW 4). The music is always dated as its popularity depended on the season’s performances, and catalogues of this music with a life span of a single year are, perhaps, the most ephemeral of all.

\(^{39}\) Catalogue at Cambridge University Library MR290. a. 80. 120. (22.) The music is Alice Gray, a Ballad, by Mrs. Philip Millard, plate number 4193. From entry dates in the Stationers’ Hall registers for the items listed in the catalogue we can deduce the “lost” year to be 1837.
Dating of catalogues via events named in source music items is usually reliable, but there can be traps. The second state of William Hodsoll’s ‘A Catalogue of Instrumental Music’ (HoW 2b) has been found within three different music items. Two of these sources have titles that quite precisely indicate their date of origin. Stephen Francis Rimbault’s The allied Sovereigns’ Grand March and Waltz, has the annotation: ‘Composed in Commemoration of their Arrival in England, June 6, 1814,’ and was entered at Stationers’ Hall on 8 July 1814. Similarly, the title page of John Purkis’ divertimento, ‘Glory to God, Peace on Earth’ has: ‘Composed in Commemoration of the Peace of Europe 1814.’ Although here no month is mentioned, the ‘commemoration of the peace of Europe 1814,’ refers to the same event, the visit of the allied sovereigns to England in June 1814, and was entered at Stationers’ Hall on 30 July 1814. Both items are printed on paper watermarked 1811 which suggests Hodsoll was using a common stock for all publications at the time, and the entry dates at Stationers’ Hall registers confirm that both items were printed in close proximity.

However, the third music item to contain the second state of Hodsoll’s catalogue (HoW 2), ‘The Siege of Badajos for the Piano Forte, with ad libitum accompaniments for the flute or violin and violoncello,’ dates from a few years earlier. Its entry at Stationers’ Hall on 30 May 1812, closely followed the event it commemorated, the taking of the Spanish town of Badajos by British forces under the Duke of Wellington on 6 April 1812. The first state of the catalogue was also printed within copies of The Siege of Badajos, and on this basis we can date the first state as prior to late May 1812. Possibly those copies containing the second state are reprints made to capture the patriotic fervour around the events of 1814. However to assign a date to the second state of the catalogue on the basis of the source item’s entry date at Stationers’ Hall, or on the date of the event commemorated would be a bibliographical error.

CONCLUSION

The dating of music catalogues is a complicated matter. We need to use and combine all the various internal and external evidence at our disposal. Watermarks, publishers’ plate numbers and imprints although not conclusive by themselves, can give reasonable working dates when used in combination. The registers at Stationers’ Hall and publication announcements offer more continual coverage as 40 This catalogue exists in three states, the first contains 312 works, the second 323 works, and the last 345 works.

41 The Siege of Badajos is one of the 11 new entries in the second state of the catalogue; therefore, the first state of the catalogue was issued before May 1812.
sources for dating. Unfortunately there is no single source spanning the entire period of this study that offers reviews of publications.

Methodical searching for all music publications which contain the same catalogues, or various states of the same catalogues, and then assembling the multiple states in systematic order has proved effective in assigning dates to music publishers’ catalogues. Reliance on a single piece of evidence can be misleading; a new catalogue or a later state could be printed on a re-issue of an earlier music print.

Only when all the available evidence has been considered and the contents listed in catalogues studied in relation to music entries in Stationers’ Hall, publication reviews and announcements in the contemporary press, can we arrive at fairly precise dates for the printing and appearance of catalogues. Despite the time-consuming and painstaking research involved, the end product becomes a vital bibliographical tool in its own right and for future studies of the operations of London publishers.
Titles listed in London music publishers’ catalogues may be divided into four categories according to their provenance. Original publications, which were obtained through direct negotiations with the composers, both domestic and foreign, comprise the first category. This category represents all works published with their composers’ approval, usually through selling a composition to a publisher. These may be termed authorized editions. Legitimate acquisitions from other publishers make up the second category. Most commonly these are items purchased from other publishers through sales at auction – usually as a result of a collapse of a firm or a publisher selling off stock, copyrights and plates – or through personal arrangements between publishers. The third category concerns imported music, or “foreign prints”. Foreign prints are publications, copies of which were obtained directly (and legally) from continental publishers. An importer had no role in the actual production of the music – engraving and printing – apart from supplying new title pages or paste-over imprint slips on occasion. Effectively, London music publishers were acting as selling agents for the continental publishing firms, but at the same time enlarging the contents of their catalogues and possibly expanding their business. When an imported edition was used legally as a basis for preparing a new publication, the newly-engraved music was no longer a foreign print, but considered a reprint. These first three categories constitute what we can consider as ‘legitimate’ publications. The fourth category of 1 Clementi’s edition of Beethoven’s variations on ‘God Save the King’ for the piano forte (WoO 78) was engraved from the Viennese edition published by the Bureau des Arts et d’Industrie, which the publisher acquired by business arrangements with the Viennese firm. See Alan Tyson, The Authentic English editions of Beethoven (London: Faber and Faber, 1963), 47; Longman & Broderip had a business relationship with Artaria. According to David Wyn Jones, their editions of Mozart’s piano sonatas (K.333, 284); Fantasia and Sonata in C (K.475, 457); and Variations for the piano forte (K.264, 353, 455, 398, 352, 360, 359); and trio in E flat (K.498); three piano trios (K.502, 542, 548) are reprints of Artaria’s. That Longman and Broderip entered these works at Stationers’ Hall indicates that they are legitimate reprints based on imported editions from Artaria. David Wyn Jones, “From Artaria to Longman & Broderip: Mozart’s Music on Sale in London,” in Studies in Music History Presented to H. C. Robbins Landon on His Seventieth Birthday, ed. Otto Biba and David Wyn Jones (London: Thames and Hudson, 1996), 109, 112-114.

provenance embraces all illegally printed items, pirated from other London and provincial publishing firms as well as from continental publishers.

This chapter examines the ‘provenance’ of the items in London music publishers’ catalogues within the framework of the above four categories. Each category will be explored through examples rather than through a survey of publisher after publisher and an enumeration of the exact proportion of each category within a particular publisher’s catalogues. A number count of publications per category would only go so far. Such an analysis would be meaningful only if the provenance of all titles listed in a catalogue could be traced and accurately identified, and it is virtually impossible to determine how every publication came into any one catalogue of any one London publisher. Some items do fall readily into our categories; others are more difficult to place. Moreover, boundaries overlap at times and there are complex cases which defy categorization. The main aim is to show how publishers could construct their catalogues and how the various ways items were acquired affected what a publisher might offer and the quantity of these offerings, and even encouraged specialism among publishers. Again the importance of catalogues as historical documents should become apparent. No other source brings so much evidence together in one place.

I. ORIGINAL PUBLICATION VIA DIRECT NEGOTIATION

I. ORIGINAL PUBLICATIONS – i) DOMESTIC COMPOSERS

Most items by English composers in music publishers’ catalogues would have come from direct purchases from composers. Regrettably, evidence of such activity is rare. Probably, it was conducted casually with purchases of music and copyright made as opportunities arose rather than being vigorously pursued, except, perhaps, in the very few cases of catalogues devoted to the music of particular English composers. In many instances it seems likely that the approach would have been from composer to publisher rather than the reverse, unless a publisher discovered that music of some composer had particular appeal. Nevertheless, such incidental acquisition must be accepted as ongoing throughout the period of this study, creating a foundation of remarkably diverse items for many a publishers’ catalogues.

Only in one instance do we have an insight into direct negotiation between domestic composers and publishers – the receipts for one-off payments made by the firm of John and Thomas Preston and their successors Coventry & Hollier, for a music item and its copyright.2

2 These receipts have been collected into an album now at BL Add. Ms. 63814. They are the subject of Katharine Hogg, “Music Publishing in London, 1773-1834: the Preston firm.” (MA thesis, University of Sheffield, 1988).

In all, there are some 133 receipts rather casually written on scraps of paper, dating from 1773 to 1839. However, these purchases represent only a small portion of the contents of the firm’s 25 catalogues. In some instances the Prestons made several purchases from the one composer (Arnold, Hook, Dibdin, Cater, Davy and Attwood). The items acquired ranged from original instrumental and vocal compositions (Thomas Carter received £9.9s from John Preston, on 23 April 1788 for his three songs, ‘Tell Lovely Delia,’ ‘That gentle unaffected Air,’ and ‘Tomorrow & its cares’) to hack-work (John Davy received £3.3.0. for adapting ‘The Beggar Girl’ as a rondo for the piano forte and arranging a new accompaniment to the song and duet of the ‘Beggar Girl’ on 15 November 1803).

Probably one of Preston’s most significant purchases of a single item was his acquisition of the 264 plates comprising Corfe’s ‘The Beauties of Handel’ (two volumes) for £150. It is possible to trace some items from purchase to catalogue (see Table 1). For example, ‘The Beauties of Handel’ appears in PrJ 11 (1805); Davy’s rondo on ‘The Beggar Girl’ appears in PrJ 7 (1803) and PrJ 10 (1805). Preston’s receipts may be seen as symptoms of a widespread practice; that is where their significance lies.

The prominence of one composer in any music publisher’s catalogues is suggestive of direct negotiation between the composer and the publisher. A number of English composers had ongoing relationships with particular publishers.
Robert Birchall was the principal publisher of Edward Smith Biggs (d. ca. 1820) from c. 1795 to 1815, and issued a catalogue devoted to his works (BR 5a to 5k). We know very little about Biggs; Sainsbury mentions him only as an “English composer of songs and canzonets.”\(^5\) That Biggs’ music is to be found only in Birchall’s catalogues suggests a direct relationship between the two, but as the entries of Biggs’ music at Stationers’ Hall indicate the composer rather than the publisher retained copyright, the relationship may have been initiated by Biggs.\(^6\) In such cases, ‘Printed for the author,’ would normally appear on music title pages; however this phrase is absent on the title pages of the surviving copies of Biggs’ music seen by the author. Perhaps it is symptomatic that Birchall confined Biggs’ output to the single-composer format of catalogues; he remained outside Birchall’s regular catalogues. Whatever its nature, the relationship between the composer and Birchall lasted at least twenty years, and judging from the catalogue which ran to 11 states, was mutually beneficial.

Joseph Dale, who published most of Stephen Storace’s English operas, issued a catalogue (DJ 8a to 8e) devoted to the composer’s output in that genre, between 1798 and 1805. In contrast to the Biggs’ example, entries at Stationers’ Hall reveal that Dale owned the copyrights to most of Storace’s operas which he published variously as scores, single vocal numbers, or in arrangements for the flute, or guitar. These works appeared in other catalogues issued by Dale, as well as in the single composer catalogue.\(^7\)

Joseph Mazzinghi (1765-1844) published much of his music with the firm of Goulding, particularly during the partnership of Goulding, Phipps & D’Almaine. The firm issued a catalogue devoted to the composer, ‘A Complete Catalogue of the works of Joseph Mazzinghi’ (GG 5a to 5g) between 1798 and 1801, and his works are also found in Goulding’s general catalogues. Goulding was not Mazzinghi’s sole publisher. His music is listed in the catalogues of Birchall, Lewis, Houston & Hyde, Longman & Broderip, and Lavenu & Mitchell. However, it was Goulding who brought out the entire oeuvre of the composer, and it has also been suggested that Mazzinghi may have had financial interests in the firm.\(^8\) Mazzinghi’s works stayed in Goulding’s catalogues well into the 1830s, and many of his works for the piano forte remained in the catalogues of D’Almaine & Co. as the firm was known after Goulding withdrew from the partnership.

\(^6\) Some London publishers seem to have taken on the publication of works “outside” their own catalogues, probably on a commission basis. The cost of publication would have been met by the composer who also retained “ownership” when a composition was entered at Stationers’ Hall.
\(^7\) “A Catalogue of the Favorite Operas with the Overtures and Songs, & c. Extracted as Composed & Selected by Stephen Storace” (DJ 8a to 8e). Prices both for the complete editions of each opera and the selection of extracts are given.
The link between the publisher James Power and the composers, Thomas Moore (1779-1852), John Andrew Stevenson (1761-1833) and Henry Rowley Bishop (1786-1855) is another example of direct association between publishers and composers, and here to the extent that the majority of Power’s vocal music publications are, in fact, works by these three composers. Power was best known for publishing series of vocal music – A Selection of Irish Melodies with Symphonies and Accompaniments for the Piano-Forte (1808-1834); A Selection of Scottish Melodies, with symphonies and accompaniments for the piano forte (1812)\(^9\) and A Selection of Popular National Airs, with Symphonies and Accompaniments (1818-1828). The publisher commissioned John Stevenson and Henry Bishop to provide instrumental accompaniments, while Thomas Moore was to write original verses as well as selecting tunes for the Irish Melodies and National Airs.\(^{10}\) From this, we may assume that other works by these three in Power’s catalogues were also born out of direct dealing between the publisher and the composers, based on the pre-established relationship.

As a variant of the composer-publisher connection, we may note William Hodson’s long retention of Stephen Francis Rimbault (1773-1837) as the main arranger for his publishing house. Rimbault provided the arrangements (for piano forte, flute, violin and violoncello) of popular symphonies and overtures by foreign composers (HoW 3a to 3h, 6, 7a and 7b) from 1819 to 1829, which make up so much of Hodson’s output.

While single-composer catalogues suggest an ongoing relationship between a composer and a publisher, only a small number of composers had an ongoing relationship with a particular publisher. The expansion of business through the purchase of the stock-in-trade of other publishers took place much less frequently. Although we have little evidence of ‘incidental’ (or one-off) purchases from domestic composers by London publishers apart from the Preston receipts, it seems likely that this was the principal method by which publishers built up their catalogues.

I. ORIgINAL PUBLICATION – II) FOREIGN COMPOSERS

With regard to the works of foreign composers in London music publishers’ catalogues, it is rather difficult to distinguish those belonging to the first category from those more appropriate to the third or the fourth categories. London had a constant influx of foreign musicians, not least because of England’s relative security from invasion and general atmosphere of peace. The city offered more lucrative opportunities to musicians than any other city on the continent. Thus, London’s music scene in the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth centuries was saturated with a foreign presence. From published memoirs as well as newspaper advertisements of concerts, we can trace which foreign composers were in London and when. To a certain extent it becomes possible to separate works that belong to our first category of provenance from the third (foreign prints). Those foreign composers who either were commissioned to write music while they were in England, or who wrote specifically for English audiences or concert venues while in London, were most likely to have their works published in London through direct arrangements with London publishers. Even composers who never visited England published music either by direct negotiation with London music publishers or via intermediaries in England who facilitated the publication process. For instance, Clementi’s editions of Beethoven’s Opp. 110, 111, 119 (in CM 10, 13) were published through direct negotiation between the publisher and the composer’s intermediary, Ferdinand Ries, who was in London from 1813 to 1824. Among the resident foreign composers who had direct connections with music publishing firms in London, was Jan Ladislav Dussek (1760-1812) who fled to London on the eve of the French Revolution in 1789, and lived there for 11 years. Dussek entered music publishing in partnership with his father-in-law, Domenico Corri, who previously had been publishing music in Edinburgh and London. Dussek’s name was added to the firm in 1794, and predictably the firm published much of Dussek’s music.

The Italian-born composer Muzio Clementi (1752-1832) turned to music publishing, first in partnership with John Longman in 1798; later the firm of “Clementi” went through several changes in partnership, until Muzio withdrew in 1830. The firm published much of Clementi’s own music, and these works represent the least complicated cases of publication of music by a foreign composer.

12 Foreign composers who visited, or were active in London’s music scene published music there, as well as with continental publishing firms in Vienna, Paris, Amsterdam, Bonn, Offenbach and Berlin.
15 Klima, “Dussek in London,” 147
17 Humphries and Smith, Music Publishing in the British Isles, 107-08, 216, 218.
18 Muzio Clementi was born in Rome in 1752. He was brought to England by Peter Beckford of Dorset in late 1766 or early 1767. Clementi spent the following seven years in Dorset, under the care of his patron, Beckford, and afterwards established himself in London as a pianist, composer and eventually as music publisher. Leon Planinga, “Clementi, Muzio,” Grove Music Online, ed. L. Macy (Accessed 4 December 2007) <http://www.grovemusic.com>
They arose, perhaps with very little negotiation, as the composer was directly involved in the publishing process. The cases of Dussek and Clementi differ from self-publishing, as each firm also published works of other composers, and the two composers’ works also are found in the catalogues of other London music publishers.

Of all the foreign composers who visited London, Joseph Haydn’s popularity was unparalleled. He was twice in London; first, from 1 January 1791 to the end of June 1792, as the composer-in-residence for Salomon’s concert series, and again from 4 February 1794 to 15 August of the following year.

Long before the first visit, William Forster published editions of music by Haydn as a result of direct dealings with the composer in Vienna. The extant contract containing the incipits of twenty works, including three trios, Op. 40 (Hob. XV: 3-5), which Haydn sold to Forster, is signed by the composer, and dated 1786. Forster’s account book records that he received the manuscript of the three trios from Haydn on 3 January 1785. The contract proves that Haydn’s Op. 40 in Foster’s catalogue (FW l1j to l1o) was engraved from the manuscript sent to the publisher by Haydn himself. Forster’s other Haydn editions, an overture (no. 4, Hob. I: 76) and Op. 42 (Hob. XV) were also prepared from manuscripts sent by the composer and received on 14 February 1784 and 26 December 1785, respectively. Forster published the overture in February 1784 (it appeared in catalogue FW 2), Op. 40 trios in February 1785, and Op. 42 in January 1786 (it appeared in FW 1k to 1q).

Preston & Son published Haydn’s Op. 71 (Hob. XV: 21-23; PrJ 11) in 1795, and entered the work at Stationers’ Hall on 23 May 1795, during the composer’s second visit. Therefore, this work also seems highly likely to have been published after direct dealings with the composer.

27 Although the authorship of the first two trios of Op. 40 has been confirmed as Ignaz Pleyel, a former pupil of Haydn, the surviving contract between Foster and Haydn proves that Forster’s Op. 40 trios, the overture in D (Hob. I. 76) and Op. 42 trios were published legitimately through direct negotiation between the publisher and the composer. Nancy A. Mace, “Haydn and the London Music Sellers: Forster v. Longman & Broderip,” Music & Letters 77, no. 4 (November 1996): 531, 540.
John Bland met Haydn in November 1789 during his second continental tour. The main aim of Bland’s two journeys – the first took place a year earlier in autumn 1788 – was to establish commercial relationships with continental publishing firms and to negotiate contracts with continental composers, especially those in Vienna. On his return from the second tour, Bland announced in his catalogue (BlJ 8), that he had “personally settled a connexion [sic] with Haydn, Hoffmeister, Mozart, Kozeluch, Paradies, Vanhall,” and he received directly from Haydn three piano trios (for piano, German flute and violoncello), which he published as nos. 12 (Hob. XV: 16, D major), 13 (Hob. XV. 15, G major) and 14 (Hob. XV: 17, F major) in the series of Le tout ensemble. These works remained in various Bland catalogues issued between 1790 and 1794 (BlJ 9b to 9g, 13a and 13b, 16a to 16c).

During Haydn’s first visit to England, Bland speedily built on his earlier association with the composer and published his six quartets (Op. 65, Hob. III. 63-68) in two sets of three quartets, entering the first set at Stationers’ Hall on 20 June 1791, and the second set on 4 July 1791. These quartets were specifically written for English audiences, to be performed at Salomon’s concerts. They first appeared in Bland’s catalogue, ‘A Catalogue of Music, Imported, Published and Sold by J. Bland.’ (BlJ 12, 1 May 1791).

English-published editions of Beethoven’s works represent equally fascinating negotiations between composer and publishers and have inspired numerous studies. From Alan Tyson’s research and an extant contract between Clementi and Beethoven dated 20 April 1807, we know Clementi’s editions of Beethoven’s violin concerto Op. 61, and its arrangement for the piano forte (CM 9), and three quartets, Op. 59 (CM 8) came from direct dealings with the composer. According to Tyson, four of 33 Kassler, Music Entries at Stationers’ Hall, 162.

Robert Birchall’s Beethoven editions also were published through direct dealings with the composer. His evidence is based on Beethoven’s correspondence of 1815-1816 and the composer’s receipt dated 9 March 1816, for the Battle Symphony, Op. 91, arranged for the piano forte (‘Battle Sinfonia’); the Seventh Symphony, Op. 92, arranged for the piano forte (appeared as Grand Symphony in A, Op. 98); Sonata Op. 96; and Grand Trio, Op. 97.\(^{36}\) All four items were announced in Birchall’s catalogue ‘Music printed sold by R. Birchall’ (BR 13c) issued in 1817.

English editions of Johann Nepomuk Hummel’s works further illustrate music issued through negotiation between London publishers and the continental composers. Hummel (1778-1837) featured prominently in all of Thomas Boosey’s catalogues (BoT 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8a, 8b, 9). Much of Boosey’s ability to bring out these editions can be credited to the London-based J. R. Schultz, who was a partner in the firm, probably before 1820. He acted as a mediator between Boosey and the composer.\(^ {37}\) Hummel’s Piano Trio, Op. 83 (1819), was the first work published by Boosey through Schultz’s dealings with the composer, and was published simultaneously with Peters.\(^ {38}\) It appeared in Boosey’s second catalogue (BoT 2), issued in c. 1820, and it was retained in Boosey’s later catalogues (BoT 5 and 7).

Many of Hummel’s piano works in Boosey’s catalogues were commissioned by Schultz.\(^ {39}\) These include Hummel’s arrangements of “Select Overtures of Beethoven, Cherubini, Gluck, Mozart, Weber, & c. with accompaniments of Flute, Violin and Violoncello,”\(^ {40}\) for the piano forte (solo),\(^ {41}\) and for the harp, piano forte, violin and violoncello\(^ {42}\) which run through Boosey’s catalogues. The Boosey-Schultz partnership was dissolved early in 1823.\(^ {43}\) Whether Schultz continued to commission works from Hummel on Boosey’s behalf is not known. Nevertheless, Hummel’s other works\(^ {44}\) are also predominant in the firm’s catalogues, and remain so for the period of this study.

\(^{44}\) Boosey’s catalogues contain over 40 other items by Hummel, including trios for Piano forte, violin and violoncello, Opp. 12, 22, 35, 65, 66, 83, 93 and 96; ten sonatas for the piano forte, including Opp. 19, 20, 50, 64, 81 and Op. 104; six sets of variations for the piano; piano forte duets Op. 92, collection of German waltzes for the piano in 5 books; and an instruction book, ‘Pianoforte School’. Boosey did not, however, issue a catalogue devoted solely to his publications of Hummel’s music.
In contrast to the somewhat casual incidental purchases publishers made from English composers, we may cite some catalogues as evidence of their much more thorough-going dealings with foreign composers active in London. In 1817 the harp virtuoso, Nicholas Charles Bochsa (1789-1856) arrived in London. He was fêted as a performer and build up a considerable teaching practice. As a fashionable member of London’s music scene, his compositions were soon in demand. The four items in James Platts’ catalogue (PlJ 9f) of 1819, rose to twenty in the Royal Harmonic Institution’s catalogue (RH 5) in 1822, to 43 in Goulding’s catalogue (GG 17) in 1826, to 140 in Chappell’s catalogue (CS 11a) in 1831, and to 178 in Goulding’s catalogue (GG 18a) in 1834. These numbers and the implied rivalry between Chappell and Goulding, suggest a quite different attitude to a socially-popular composer who could be tapped as a considerable commercial asset.

II. ACQUISITION

Notices in newspapers about forthcoming sales of music stock at auction or announcing a publisher’s recent acquisitions of stock from other publishers or the change of ownership of a business provide evidence for separating out music items which belong to the second category of provenance. After a business or its stock changed hands or was sold at auction, it was common for the purchaser to issue a catalogue which gave prominence to such stock, or at least to place an informative advertisement in the contemporary press.

II. ACQUISITION – I) EXPANSION OF BUSINESS

Publishers such as Robert Bremner, Longman & Broderip, Robert Birchall, Joseph Dale, John and Thomas Preston expanded their operations by purchasing copyrights, plates and stock from other publishers, often in bankruptcy sales. Evidence of such expansion of businesses is found in the abovementioned Preston receipts: Thomas Preston purchased entire stock-in-trade of Thomas Skillern in August 1802 and of Hermond Wright in July 1803. Within one year he acquired over 5,400 plates.

45 See Chapter 5, Table 5-a, pp. 238. Bochsa also provided the harp part to Hummel’s arrangements of “Select Overtures of Beethoven, Cherubini, Gluck, Mozart, Weber & c.” for the harp, piano forte, violin and violoncello. (BoT 8a and 8b)
46 For a more detailed discussion on Bochsa and the inclusion of his music across a wider range of catalogues, see Chapter 5, p. 237.
II. ACQUISITION – 1) EXPANSION OF BUSINESS – A) CATALOGUES DEVOTED TO PURCHASED ITEMS (PrJ 4 and 13)

Preston and Son issued a dated catalogue (PrJ 4) ‘1790. Additional Catalogue of Instrumental and Vocal Music … Late the Property of that Eminent Dealer, Mr. Robert Bremner’. On the death of Bremner in May 1789, his business was almost immediately advertised for sale by auction to be held in July 1789. Preston and Son purchased Bremner’s entire stock-in-trade of the London business, while the Scottish publisher John Brysson (d. 1818) took over Bremner’s Edinburgh business. The appearance of this acquisition catalogue closely followed the date of the sale. PrJ 4 contains nearly 800 items, a huge boost to Preston’s own offerings. Several works in this catalogue reappear in Preston’s later catalogues, but a significant number of items were listed only in this catalogue, suggesting that once Bremner’s remaining copies were sold, Preston had no desire to reprint them.

The next significant acquisition by the firm of Preston was made by the son, Thomas Preston who in 1798 became sole proprietor of the firm. He purchased Wilkinson & Co.’s stock-in-trade which was put up for auction in June 1810, acquiring over 700 items, nearly the equivalent of the increase from the Bremner purchase. His subsequent advertisements in the London press clearly indicate the steps that might be taken after purchase of stock. In December, Preston announced his acquisition of ‘the 48 The receipt is dated 22 July 1803. Preston acquired 2,368 music plates and their copyright from H. Wright for £260. Wright had operated as a music printer, music seller and publisher from 1785 to 1803. Humphries and Smith, Music Publishing in the British Isles, 343.

50 In The Morning Chronicle, advertisements for the auction sale first appear on 30 May, and are then repeated in the issues of 2, 8 and 12 June. The advertisement of Friday 8 June states that the auction will take place ‘on next Tuesday [12th], at 12 o’clock.’
entire and extensive Stock of Music Plates and Copyright, the Property of Wilkinson and Co (late Broderip and Wilkinson) of Haymarket,’ as well as of ‘new editions of which are now prepared, and ready for delivery; and also a Catalogue of the same, which will speedily be followed by another, when the whole will be incorporated with his other numerous publications.’

From Wilkinson’s plates, he reprinted a “selection” and set them out in a stand-alone catalogue comprising more than 730 items entitled ‘Catalogue of Musical Publications selected from the Catalogue published by Broderip & Wilkinson, lately purchased’ (PrJ 13) which appeared in 1811. Eventually he planned to reprint all the Wilkinson items, amalgamate these with his own productions and issue a comprehensive catalogue of his enlarged repertoire. However, the promised catalogue has not been located. Preston’s fourteenth catalogue, ‘Select Classical Publications,’ dated late-1815, is just a single folio sheet catalogue, containing only 84 items, 38 of which were already listed in PrJ 13. We have now seen the firm of Preston demonstrate two of the four categories of provenance of items making up publishers’ catalogues.

II. ACQUISITION – 1) EXPANSION OF BUSINESS - B) ADVERTISED AS SEPARATE ENTITIES WITHIN A CATALOGUE (BrR 1)

Purchased items sometimes appear as a distinct section within a catalogue of the purchaser’s own output. In c. 1779, Robert Bremner produced an ‘Additional Catalogue’ (BrR 1) and stated:

The following, among which are many valuable and classical Works, were formerly the Property of the late Mrs. Johnson of Cheapside, Mrs. Welcker [Widow of Peter Welcker], of Gerrard-street, Soho, and others; and are now to be had at Mr. Bremner’s, he having purchased the Plates and Copies. Those who have seen the Catalogues of the original Publishers will discover that the Articles are, in general, greatly reduced from their former Prices. This Reduction will continue ‘till the remaining Copies are sold.

According to Humphries and Smith, Mrs Mary Welcker, widow of Peter Welcker, died in early 1778, and Bremner purchased some of Mrs Welcker’s plates in 1779. Bremner’s acquisition of Mrs. John Johnson’s music plates had taken place earlier and was advertised in November 1777.

52 This wording is more likely a reference to Broderip & Wilkinson’s total repertoire of publications rather than to a specific catalogue.
54 Such a catalogue, if issued, would belong to the second case.
55 Catalogue at BL Hirsch IV. 1112. (2.) March 1782. The “Catalogue of the original Publishers” has not been located.
56 Humphries and Smith, Music Publishing in the British Isles, 327.
The ‘Additional Catalogue’ is clearly an acquisition catalogue, prepared as a separate entity. Its recto side is not numbered (with title only); but the verso is numbered as page ‘(4)’ suggesting that originally, BrR 1 may have been part of a two-leaf catalogue probably issued by Bremner sometime in late 1779 or 1780. Bremner was not reprinting Welcker’s or Johnson’s publications; he was simply trying to get rid of the stock by selling at reduced prices.

II. ACQUISITION – i) EXPANSION OF BUSINESS – c) INTEGRATED INTO CATALOGUES OF THE PURCHASER (LB 4, LB 6, DJ 1b)

In some cases, purchases appear integrated within the general catalogue of the purchaser. Another catalogue advertising acquisition of Peter Welcker’s property was that issued by Longman & Broderip (LB 4), entitled ‘Additional Catalogue of the many Valuable Instrumental and Vocal Compositions, purchased by them at the Sale of the late Mr. Welcker’s Effects; Now Printed and Sold, Wholesale, Retail [sic] and for Exportation, at their Music Warehouse.’ This stand-alone catalogue must have appeared early in 1780. The title of the catalogue suggests that it is a specially prepared catalogue for the acquisition. However, the notice at the foot of the title page, “N.B. Those [items] distinguished by the following Mark * are new Publications, and other Works not inserted in their sheet Catalogue,” makes it clear that the catalogue contains Longman and Broderip’s own publications as well as items purchased from Welcker, although the marked (*) items make up only a quarter of the contents.

Longman & Broderip’s catalogue ‘MDCCCLXXXI. Catalogue of Music’ (LB 6) retained many of Welcker’s prints purchased a year earlier (LB 4) but now they were intermixed and not distinguished from Longman & Broderip’s own publications.

Joseph Dale’s first catalogue (1785) in its second state (DJ 1b) is the only example from this publisher which clearly states the provenance of the titles listed. The catalogue includes acquisitions

58 The sheet may have been torn apart at the fold, separating the two catalogues. There are actually two catalogues comprising item (2) in BL Hirsch IV. 1112. (2.): The first ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music,’ dated March 1782, is a folded folio sheet paginated ‘(1) to (4)’. The second is the ‘Additional Catalogue’ of c. 1780. These items should not be seen as two parts of a single catalogue.
59 Catalogue at BOD Johnson d. 1704 (2) 8pp 8vo, c. early-1780. Humphries and Smith mention only Robert Bremner as the purchaser of Welcker’s stock after the death of Peter’s widow, Mary. Bremner, it seems was not the sole purchaser.
60 The first state of the catalogue also dates from 1785, and has only one item (Dale’s 3 duets, Op. 7) fewer than the second state. However, the publisher did not specify provenance of titles in the first state.
from William Napier and Charles Rennett. Under the publisher’s imprint, the publisher appended the following notice:61

N. B. The Plates, Copy-right and Copies, of the Books marked + were Purchased of William Napier, Music Seller in the Strand, for £540. Those marked • of Charles Rennett, Temple, once the Property of John Welcker, Music Seller, Hay Market, for £682.

Of the 60 works listed, 25 are marked as coming from Rennett who was an attorney by profession, but had connections to the music trade. He became John (son of Peter and Mary) Welcker’s silent (financial) partner when Welcker went bankrupt in 1778, and purchased some of John Welcker’s stock when the music-seller’s effects were put up for auction because of his bankruptcy, in 1779.62 John Welcker seems to have gone out of business in c. 1785, and this may have prompted Rennett to sell his (ex-Weckler) copyrights and plates to Dale. Fifteen items were purchased from Napier. However this may have been a private transaction between Dale and Napier, as Napier carried on his business until 1809. The remaining twenty items in the catalogue are not marked; these were Dale’s own publications.

II. ACQUISITION – II) SUCCESSION

A number of publishers – Lewis, Houston & Hyde, Francis Linley, William Hodsoll, Zenas Trivett Purday, Purday and Button, John Barnett & Co., and Coventry & Hollier – entered the music trade as successors to established publishing firms. In this way they acquired plates not only of the music items but also of the catalogues their predecessors had published. Reprints of their predecessors’ publications would have provided much of their output until they gradually built up their catalogues with their own editions, with the proportion of reprints to original publications changing over time.63 All this is reflected in the catalogues issued by successive purchasers making them a bibliographic tool which encapsulates in folio sheets important movements in the history of London music-publishing. They provide a record arguably all too little appreciated, far more comprehensive than might otherwise be laboriously compiled from individual items remaining extant today.

61 Catalogue printed within music publications at BL g. 131. (1.); BOD Mus. Instr. I, 79 (15); CAM MRA340. 75. 55. c. 1785.
63 It will be apparent that the taking over of a publishing business was very different from purchasing stock and incorporating it into the purchaser’s own production. As we have seen stock so acquired usually was distinguished in some way, if only briefly. In catalogues of succession no distinction is made between items of the former owner and those of the purchasing publisher. The entire catalogue, as it were, changes hands – a move practically represented by a change in imprint.
The wording of such catalogues is informative about proprietorship. In their first catalogue (PB 1) Purday & Button described themselves as ‘Successor to Mr. Thompson’ – a line removed from subsequent catalogues. Coventry & Hollier, who succeeded Thomas Preston, frequently referred to their business as ‘late Preston’; Zenas Trivett Purday successor to William Hodsoll likewise advertised his business as ‘late Hodsoll’ on the catalogues he issued. The firm of John Barnett & Co. of Regent Street was known as ‘successors to Gow & Son.’

Among the publishers whose businesses passed to a string of successors is John Bland of 45 Holborn. His immediate successors were Lewis, Houston and Hyde who reissued the plates of two catalogues, a title catalogue (LHH 1a and 1b, c. 1795 and 1796, respectively) and a thematic catalogue (LHH 2, c. 1796) for the series ‘Periodical Italian Songs’ that Bland began in 1790. The last state of Bland’s title catalogue for that series (BIJ 11b) contained 49 songs (numbered 1 to 49) plus 15 miscellaneous items. The second and last state of Lewis, Houston and Hyde’s title catalogue for the series contained an additional 11 songs (numbered 50 to 60) and two further miscellaneous items. Although they continued the business for a couple of years, in this instance, the new proprietors appear to have added very little to the stock inherited from Bland, operating largely on reprints of Bland’s publications.

The three catalogues of Francis Linley, who succeeded Lewis, Houston and Hyde in early 1797, continue some of Bland’s periodical collections: ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Bland’s Collection of Divine Music’ (LiF 1), ‘Le tout Ensemble, Sonatas with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte’ (LiF 2a and 2b) and ‘Index to Bland’s 2vols of Catches, Glees, Canons, Canzonets, Madrigals, & c. & c.’ (LiF 3). Two of the three (LiF 1 and 3) are reprints of Bland’s catalogues plates (with no additions). The second catalogue LiF 2, was newly engraved and included only Le tout Ensemble category of BIJ 16. However it also contained five additional items.

Linley’s business was sold at auction, owing to bankruptcy, and his plates and stock-in-trade appear to have gone to more than one publisher. Here, direct succession through proprietorship of business is replaced by dispersal. Humphries and Smith name William Hodsoll as Linley’s direct successor; however, it appears that Hodsoll took over only the business premises, 45 High Holborn.

64 Humphries and Smith, Music Publishing in the British Isles, 211.
65 Linley was the first to separate the two categories making up BIJ 16. He does not appear to have issued a separate catalogue for the ‘Duets’.
68 Hodsoll’s imprint always reads “45 High Holborn;” Bland’s imprint had always been “45 Holborn”.
The treatment of the Bland / Linley stock was varied. George Goulding retained some series intact.
His third catalogue, ‘Periodical Italian Songs’ (GG 3a and 3b) is a reprint of Lewis, Houston & Hyde;69 his fourth catalogue, ‘Index to Le tout Ensemble, Sonatas with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte by the following eminent Masters’ (GG 4) although printed from newly-engraved plates, is an expansion of that which Goulding “inherited” from Bland, through purchase from Francis Linley.

Robert Birchall, however, seems to have been the principal purchaser of Linley’s stock, continuing most of Bland’s collections and their associated catalogues into the first decade of the nineteenth century. In fact, only Bland’s series of “Periodical Italian Songs” does not appear in Birchall’s repertoire. Birchall’s treatment of his purchases varies. He is content to reissue Bland’s 1793 plates of the thematic catalogue of the harpsichord collection (48 numbers) in 1800, yet at the same time expands the collection to 60 numbers and incorporates it into his title catalogue running to twelve states (BR 4a to 4l) between 1797 and 1803. In 1800, Birchall converts Bland’s first catalogue of Le Tout Ensemble (BIJ 16a) into a title catalogue, ignoring Bland’s own expansion of the contents (BIJ 16b, 16c) and those of Linley. At the same time he continues with the other half of Bland’s catalogue (BIJ 16), issuing the Collection of Duets in BR 13a to 13c until 1817.

This rather involved line of succession may be represented diagrammatically on the basis of the subsequent reuse of five of the catalogues Bland issued for his periodical collections. It is also worth remarking that this handing of catalogue plates from publisher to publisher reinforces the qualities permanency and flexibility that made the engraved plate such a favoured process of catalogue production.70 For example, the plate of Bland’s catalogue BIJ 11b (c. 1790) passed to Lewis, Houston & Hyde and on to Goulding, gaining and losing some items but otherwise remaining unchanged eight years later.

Zenas Trivett Purday, who succeeded William Hodsoll in 1831 and operated from the same premises, reprinted much of Hodsoll’s output at least during his first few years in business. A comparison of the two publishers’ catalogues immediately reveals the initially dependant nature of Purday’s business. Purday’s thematic catalogue ‘No. II. Catalogue Thematique, of Symphonies and Overtures’ (PZ 3, c. 1835) was a newly engraved version of Hodsoll’s similarly-named catalogue, HoW 7b (see Catalogue Plate 4-9, c. 1829). Like Hodsoll, Purday listed 39 items; 30 of these were listed in Hodsoll’s catalogue. Among the seemingly new nine items Purday included, five had already been published by Hodsoll (Rimbault’s arrangements of Romberg’s overture to Ulysse et Circe, Pleyel’s Symphony No. 4, Boieldieu’s overture to Du Nouveau Seigneur, and Weigl’s overture to Gli Amori, and Auber’s overture to Masaniello). This further reduces Purday’s own contribution.

Hodsoll’s catalogue devoted to works by John Purkis (HoW 4a to 4f) and Purday’s Purkis catalogue (PZ 4) further show Purday’s business was largely based on reprinting. Although the catalogue was re-engraved, of the 35 works listed, 33 were taken over from the last state of Hodsoll’s catalogue, HoW 4f.

Catalogue Plate 4-1, BJ 11b (A1, title cat. c. 1790)

76 Extant music bears Hodsoll’s imprint. However these items have not been found within any of Hodsoll’s catalogues.
This catalogue is a reprint of Bland’s catalogue BIJ 11b. LHH 1a additions (nos. 50-53) are marked in green; 1b additions (nos. 54 to 60 and 2 miscellaneous items) are marked in red. Apart from the additional items and the change made to the publisher’s imprint, the two plates (BIJ 11b and LHH 1) are identical in all respects.
This again is a reprint of Bland’s catalogue, BĲ 11b, using LHH’s plate. Goulding extended the collection to 77 numbers and removed the miscellaneous collection of songs from the third column. Additional items (c.f. LHH 1b, Catalogue Plate 4-2) are marked in red.
Additional items in BIJ 10b (c.f. to BIJ 10a) are marked in green; additional items in LHH 2 (c.f. BIJ 10b) are marked in red.
Goulding’s newly engraved plate contained only the items in Le tout Ensemble (c.f. Catalogue Plate 4-6; BIJ 16 contained indexes to two collections.) Goulding adds fifteen numbers, but leaves the last three unnumbered. He is more explicit than Bland in the titles of several items. However, Goulding retains Bland’s advertisement at the foot of the plate unchanged.
Items additional to HoW 7b but confirmed to have been issued by Hodsoll are marked in green; the rest of the additional items (possibly Purday’s own editions) are marked in red.
Foreign music had been imported into England from the continent at least since the time of John Walsh in the first half of the eighteenth-century. Some English publishers so focussed on this trade that they could issue catalogues specifically devoted to the foreign music they had imported. In other cases, imported titles appear in general catalogues under a separate subsection headed ‘Foreign prints,’ or more explicitly, ‘Pleyel’s edition,’ in the case of music imported from the Paris firm of Pleyel.

However, as there was more than one route by which foreign compositions found their way into London music publishers’catalogues, the acquisition of foreign items is not always straightforward to unfold. In many cases, there is insufficient evidence to determine whether a foreign item was reprinted, imported or pirated. Furthermore, works of foreign composers are ubiquitous in the catalogues of many London music publishers, who did not classify themselves as importers or publishers of foreign music. We also have to remember that titles in foreign languages are not necessarily indications of prints of foreign origin, or of prints intended for export, as French and Italian were then considered fashionable languages for music. In some cases, French titles were used on music title pages, while in the catalogues, the same works were given English titles. Therefore, the third category is examined primarily based on the claims made by publishers in the contemporary press and in their catalogues.

From advertisements in newspapers and various documents, we know of several London publishers who were associated with specific continental firms. For example, Longman & Broderip imported Haydn’s music from the composer’s principal Viennese publisher, Artaria. This business relationship was established at the latest by January 1784, as confirmed by Longman & Broderip’s advertisement in The Public Advertiser, on 17 January 1784. These publishers also announced the arrival of their foreign editions in newspapers, as for instance, in The Times of 1 December 1787:

> “Lately imported from the Continent, great varieties of Harp Music by the most eminent masters; together with most distinguished new works of the following authors, consisting of Simphonies [sic], Concertos, Quartets, Trios, Duets, Solos, and Harpsichord Sonatas, by Haydn, Pleyel, Kozeluch, Mozart, Breval, Trickler, Fodor, Devienne, Vanhal, Sterckel, Viotti, & c.”

80 “NEW MUSIC. This Day is Published, By LONGMAN and BRODERIP.” The Times, 1 December 1787.
Longman & Broderip issued two catalogues which suggest a substantial role for imported music in their business operations: ‘1786. A Complete Register of all the New Music Publications imported from different parts of Europe’ (LB 13) \(^{81}\) and ‘1789. A Complete Register of New Music Published in England, and Imported from different parts of Europe’ (LB 15). \(^{82}\) Unfortunately, both catalogues contained both foreign and domestic music, and in neither did the publishers distinguish foreign prints from their own publications, making it rather difficult for us to discern which works of foreign composers belong to the first or the third category of provenance. Nonetheless, it is clear that Longman & Broderip introduced a variety of instrumental music including symphonies, overtures, chamber and keyboard music by Mozart, Luigi Boccherini, Leopold Kozeluch, Franz Anton Rosetti and Johann Baptist Vanhall to London through regular importation from Artaria in Vienna. \(^{83}\)

Bland advertised his “extensive connexions [sic] with the publishers of music abroad” in his 1786 stand-alone dated catalogue (BJ 4, 25 March 1786). This publisher had a commercial relationship with the Viennese firm, Hoffmeister, \(^{84}\) which became Bland’s major source of Viennese keyboard and chamber music by Haydn, Pleyel, Lacknith, Sterkell, Pichl, Rosetti, Cramer, Devienne, Hoffmeister and Mozart, from 1789. \(^{85}\)

Chappell who began publishing music in 1811 also advertised his collection of imported music in a notice appeared in the Morning Chronicle, 8 December 1814. He does not mention his source of foreign prints; nevertheless the notice is informative of diversity of foreign music he could offer:

> Foreign Music. – Just imported … a large Collection of Foreign Music, containing all the best Operas of Cherubini, Paer, Righini, Haydn, Mozart, & c. Also a great variety of Pianoforte and Harp Music, amongst which will be found the latest productions of the Continent, with a large assortment of Symphonies, Overtures, Quartetts, Trios and Duettts for Violins, Flute & c. & c. by best authors.

From the outset, the firms of Wessel & Co., Thomas Boosey & Co., and Robert Cocks & Co., intended to be importers and publishers of foreign music. They styled themselves ‘importers of music,’ and commenced business on the basis of a stock of imported music. \(^{86}\) Gradually their own publications were added to their catalogues.

81 Catalogue at BL 7896. h. 40. (9.). 4pp fol. The catalogue was advertised in The Daily Universal Register, 24 February 1786.
82 Catalogue at the BOD Johnson d. 1704 (3) 8pp 8vo.
Thomas Boosey was one of the most outstanding importers of music in this period. The firm began as booksellers in 1792; the music side of business is known to have begun in 1816. A catalogue of music issued a couple of years later seems to be the earliest extant. However, Boosey was importing foreign music from the continent well before 1816. Advertisements such as that which appeared in The Times, 25 December 1811, give insight into the scope of Boosey’s foreign offerings. It reads:

Just imported, by T. Boosey and Co., … the Operas of Mozart and Rossini, the original, correct, and elegant editions, arranged for the pianoforte, with Italian and German words … by Mozart, ‘Don Juan,’ 1l.; ‘Figaro,’ 1l. 5s.; ‘Il Flauto Magico,’ 15s.; ‘La Clemenza di Tito,’ 10s.; ‘Così Fan Tutte,’ 1l. 5s.; ‘Idomeneo,’ 1l. 6s.; ‘L’Enlevement du Serail,’ 1l. 2s. 6d.; ‘Il Direttore della Comedia,’ 7s. 6d.; Opera Songs, which do not belong to his [Mozart] well known operas, 2 books, 1l. or the complete set 8l. 8s.; by Rossini, ‘Il Barbiere di Seviglia,’ 1l. 5s.; ‘Tancredi,’ 1l. 10s.; ‘Elizabeth in England,’ 1l. 5s.; ‘Otello,’ 1l. 5s.

In this advertisement, Boosey did not reveal the source of these foreign editions. However, a little later, we learn the identity of at least one of the major suppliers of foreign prints from a notice in the Morning Chronicle, 24 November 1814:

German Music. – Just imported by T. Boosey, … a very extensive and interesting Collection of German Music, principally the stock of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig who have appointed T. Boosey their Agent in London. In the selection will be found the works of the latest and best composers, consisting of Sonatas, Rondos, Overtures, Dances, Marches, Concertos, Trios, Quartetos & c. & c. – arranged for an Orchestra, Pianoforte, Violin, Flute, Guitar, Clarionette, French Horn, Bass Horn, and Bassoon; a catalogue of which may be had gratis. … A General Catalogue of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel’s Music, who are well known to be the principal publishers on the Continent may be had of T. Boosey … price 6d. … and all orders for music published in Germany will be speedily executed on reasonable terms.

This advertisement is particularly important. Not only does it exemplify the close associations some English publishers had established with continental music publishers, but for the first time we have evidence of an English publisher appointed as agent. We also have evidence of a catalogue produced by Boosey, nearly four years earlier than the earliest surviving catalogue of 1818. That Boosey also had Breitkopf's catalogue for sale means the public would be able to select from a wider range of compositions than those imported solely on the judgement, or more probably business acumen, of a London music publisher.

87 D. J. Blaikley, William C. Smith, and Peter Ward Jones, ‘Boosey & Hawkes’.
88 It may be worth considering whether the dating of Boosey as a music firm should not be put back to late 1814.
Boosey reinforced the scope of his offerings of foreign music in December 1814 issue of The Monthly Magazine:

Mr. T. Boosey has just imported a choice selection of the most esteemed works of German composers; among other celebrated writers, are those of Beethoven, Cherubini, Campagnoli, Dumonchau, Dussek, Gelinek, Haydn, Himmel, Hague, Hummel, Kuster [sic], Kirmeyer [sic], Mozart, Menger, Neukon [sic], Paer, Romberg, Rötti, Steibelt, Sterkel, Turk, Winter, Weber, & c. consisting of music for an orchestra, voice, pianoforte, violin, flute, guitar, clarinet, French horn, bass horn, bassoon, and organ; and arranged as sonatas, rondos, overtures, concertos, variations, trios, quartetos, quintetos, and marches; principally from the stock of Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel of Leipzig.89

A month later he presented his credentials as the agent of Breitkopf and HärTEL to a wider readership with a notice in the Gentleman's Magazine:

T. Boosey, 4, Broad Street, agent for Breitkopf and HärTEL of Leipzig, has published a catalogue of valuable German musick, just imported.90

The connection with the Leipzig publisher explains the dominance of Germanic composers in Boosey’s catalogues. Although neither specific titles nor the quantity of music imported were mentioned, the range of genres, scorings and the number of composers show the astonishing range of foreign music Boosey was introducing to England at the end of the Napoleonic wars.

A similar notice appeared in June 1815 The Monthly Magazine suggests Boosey was importing at quite frequent intervals:

Mr. T. Boosey has just imported a new and interesting collection of German music, besides the works of many eminent composers mentioned in the last catalogue: he has received, in addition, sonatas, rondos, duos, trios, quartetos, variations, dances, marches, overtures, operas, songs and hymns, etc., by Andree, Agthe, Binder, Boieldieu, Beethoven, Backofen, Cimarosa, Cherubini, Catel, Dulon, Ferrari, Gelinek, Gabler, Haydn, Himmel, Köhler, Kurpinski, Karr, Latroube, Mozart, Mehul, Newkourm [sic], Paer, Riem, Röttte, Steibelt, Spontini, Winter, Wanthal [sic], and many others, for an orchestra, piano-forte, violin, harp, guitar, flute, and the most esteemed vocal pieces.91

This time, Breitkopf and HärTEL are not mentioned; however, the ‘collection of German music’ hints that this mainstay supplier (and Boosey as agent) remained in place. Of the 29 named composers, 17 are Germanic – Andree (presumably André of Offenbach), Agthe, Binder, Beethoven, Backofen, Dulon, Gabler, Haydn, Himmel, Köhler, Karr, Mozart, Neukomm, Riem, Röttte, Steibelt and von

Winter, and these composers’ works were published by Breitkopf and Härtel.\(^\text{92}\) In addition, the Czech composer, Gelinek who was chiefly active in Austria, as was the Bohemian, Vanhal, also were published by the Leipzig firm. The others are French and Italians. Of the French composers, A. Boieldieu, C. S. Catel and Etienne Henry Mehul were published by Breitkopf and Härtel; works by Italian composers, D. Cimarosa, J. G. Ferrari, L. Cherubini, Ferdinando Paer and Gasparo von Spontini, and by the Polish composer C. Kurpinsky are also listed in the firm’s catalogue.\(^\text{93}\)

Six months later Boosey prepared to put his imported music before the public on a more regular basis:

T. Boosey respectfully informs the Amateurs of Foreign Music, that he has just published an extensive Catalogue for 1816; consisting of the stock of Messrs Breitkopf and Härtel, and other eminent publishers in Germany … \(^\text{94}\)

and in May 1818:

German Music, just imported. Boosey and Co, … respectfully inform the Public that their Catalogue of German Music for 1818, containing an extensive Importation of the Works of the most celebrated Composers, may now be had, Price 1s. … \(^\text{95}\)

In November, 1818 Boosey announced that their “Catalogue of Foreign Music for 1819 is preparing for the Press, including very extensive importations from all parts of the Continent” further declaring it to be “nearly ready for the Press” in the following January and as “in the press and will shortly be published” in April\(^\text{96}\) Finally, in May Boosey advertised that “Boosey and Co's extensive catalogue of Foreign Music for 1819, is just published, price 2s.”\(^\text{97}\)

From a notice in the June 1819 issue of Monthly Magazine, we learn more of the extent and impact of Boosey’s import business and something of the huge dimensions of his catalogues of foreign music:

Boosey and Co.’s Catalogue of Foreign Music, in 216 octavo pages, is, for its extent and variety, a literary and musical curiosity. It exhibits all that is valuable in continental publications, excites an appetite, and gratifies it by affording the power of immediate possession at an easy cost. Scores of names of composers of evident science will be made known to the English public through this catalogue; and, in addition to their entire works, in gross or in detail.\(^\text{98}\)

Admittedly, this notice most likely was a “puff” inserted by Boosey, yet it hints that his importing operation went far beyond that of his rivals. He had made it his specialisation, and whether or not it was profitable, his operation made conveniently accessible through his catalogue, must have played a significant role in widening, in a quite short space of time, the repertoire available to all manner of performers and increasing significantly knowledge of musical developments and emerging composers on the continent.

The earliest extant catalogue, ‘Selection of Admired Compositions contained in T. Boosey & Co’s General Catalogue of Foreign Music & Supplement’ (BoT 1), a stand-alone letterpress catalogue of four pages, predates that mentioned in the Monthly Magazine in June, 1819. It probably represents the compositions with which Boosey had had the most commercial success since bringing out catalogues from late 1814. It does allow for a little analysis. Even as a ‘selection’ it shows the continued dominance of Germanic composers (50%); French (18%), Italian (14%), Bohemian, Czech composers constitute the rest (see Table 2).99 For the first time we also have access to the titles of the music imported, and it is interesting to note that the operas by Mozart named in his early advertisement in 1811 are retained in the catalogue. Those by Rossini vary a little. Despite the elapse of seven years, there has been very little change in prices (see Catalogue Plate 4-10).

99 The contents of the catalogue are ordered by genre; nationality plays no role.
All six Mozart’s operas in Boosey’s 1811 advertisement are listed in this catalogue. With the exception of Cosi fan tutte the price of which has been raised from £1.5s. to £1.10s., the prices of the other five works have not been changed. Three of the five Rossini’s operas in the same advertisement are also offered here at the identical prices as in 1811.

Breitkopf would not have been Boosey’s only source of importation, however. In 1814 Boosey’s wording was “principally from the stock of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel” and in most advertisements the mention of ‘very extensive importations from the Continent,’ suggests dealings with more than one continental firm. Bland, for instance, continued to import foreign prints from Hoffmeister, even after he had established a relationship with foreign composers such as Haydn and Kozeluch. Longman and Broderip’s foreign publications included prints which they imported from Artaria and other continental firms, as well as their own reprints from foreign editions; and undoubtedly their catalogue would have included publications procured through direct negotiation with foreign composers. Boosey also published works acquired through direct dealings with foreign composers; his dealings with Hummel and the dominance of that composer’s music throughout his catalogues has already been mentioned.

IV. PIRACY

Some publishers undoubtedly expanded their catalogues substantially in this way, and may even have specialized in selling pirated editions. Indeed, illegal printing was widespread to the extent that all publishers practised it at some point.100 This makes the fourth category in this survey of provenance of items in London music publishers’ catalogues the most problematic to pin down, especially when it comes to the popular genres and composers prominent in so many publishers’ catalogues.

I have suggested elsewhere that English editions of Josef Gelinek’s airs with variations, issued by various publishers such as Robert Birchall, Clementi & Co., Samuel Chappell, Henry Falkner and Goulding & Co. are highly likely to have been pirated from a single continental source.101 It is worth repeating that such extraordinary piracy was the result of fashionable demand for a fashionable genre of music for a fashionable instrument and, very likely, for fashionable composers and performers as well. There has to be only one printed source for the proliferation of pirated editions, and in Gelinek’s case, an imported Viennese print probably served as the basis for the numerous English editions.

Copyright protection in England required a publisher or author to enter a publication in the registers at Stationers’ Hall. These now provide primary evidence for separating works which belong to the first category from those of the fourth, as publications were entered by authors or publishers who owned the copyrights and their names were recorded. Obviously, the publisher of pirated edition could not risk such an entry. Publications by minor publishers whose names rarely appear in the registers of the Stationers Hall may suggest pirated editions, but this is by no means definitive evidence. Certainly, not all authorized editions were entered at Stationers’ Hall.\textsuperscript{102} To register a publication, the publisher or author had to meet the legal deposit requirement which entailed the deposit of nine to eleven copies as well as the payment of an entry fee. Although the Copyright Act of 1814 introduced legal penalties for not registering, these were not sufficient to force publishers to enter works at Stationers’ Hall.\textsuperscript{103}

It is difficult to determine the extent to which pirated editions boosted the size of a publisher’s catalogue, or where it occurred (for particular types of music items) but there seems little doubt that a not inconsiderable portion of the overall provenance of a catalogue can be attributed to piracy. The problem lies in what we do not know and the extent of our ignorance as opposed to what we do know, which probably constitutes a minute fraction of all unauthorized editions as a whole. The matter is further compounded by the absence of international copyright in this period.\textsuperscript{104} What we now consider as piracy may have been legally acceptable practice in the late eighteenth- and early nineteenth-centuries. Publishers could secure copyright for certain countries, but England was seldom one of these. We must bear in mind that piracy was not exclusively confined to the minor players.

\textbf{CONCLUSION}

By the early decades of the nineteenth century the music-publishing scene in London had become extremely complex. The intricacy of this world is attested to by the different ways in which music by \textsuperscript{102} The point has been made earlier that it is equally certain that not all music prints (authorised or not) bearing “Entd. Sta. Hall” actually were entered at the Hall. See Chapter 3, p. 124.

\textsuperscript{104} The concept of international copyright did not come about until the middle of the nineteenth century. Tyson, “Steps to Publication and Beyond,” 461.
domestic and foreign composers came into the hands of the London publishers. It is also recorded by the diversity of composers and compositions represented in catalogues. That music-publishing activities could so expand demonstrates that the economy and size of London provided a growing market sufficient to support and even stimulate this competitive business to the extent that most publishers could survive if not necessarily thrive. The provenance of publications in London music-publishers’ catalogues reveals the increasingly diverse means by which publishers sought to expand the range of their publications, or to develop specializations, and reveals too that already by the early nineteenth century, the music trade in London was internationalized. Studied in this way, the catalogues are documents that testify to the cosmopolitan nature of London music publishing and London’s place at the centre of the music publishing world of the time.
CHAPTER 5.

READING THE CATALOGUES

OVERVIEW

The most important function of music-publishers’ sale catalogues was to inform the music-buying public. Catalogues were designed to assist readers when searching for music in print, and more importantly, to entice them into buying music. Catalogues were never conceived as documents for posterity, and their utilitarian purpose made them largely ephemeral in nature. Yet, no other single source presents the scope and diverse facets of the music-publishing industry and musical culture of the late-eighteenth and the early-nineteenth centuries as explicitly as publishers’ sale catalogues. In essence, they are a microcosm of the musical world as perceived and, at least in part created by the publishers. This lends further weight to the contention that close examination of the publishers’ catalogues allows us to see clearly and quite precisely the contemporary shifts in musical aesthetics, social changes and changes in performance practices.

Naturally, catalogues reflect the changes in music consumerism, the variations in the commercial interests of music publishers as well as the demands of the music-buying public. Although these were fundamental premises common to all catalogues, the manner in which the contents of catalogues were laid out by various music publishers was far from universal. Even catalogues issued by a single publisher varied considerably in their focus and structure.

This chapter investigates how the focus and structure of the catalogues were modified to accommodate perceived changes in the musical trends and preferences. It explores how publishers deployed catalogues as a manipulative commercial device to cultivate and exploit public taste. To illustrate the nature of sale catalogues as a commercial device, we will concentrate on three aspects – medium, genre, and composer – which came to serve as the conceptual basis of the majority of catalogues. This promotion of medium, genre and composer reflects the publishers’ specific thoughts concerning popular instruments, favoured genres, and even favourite composers. It also reveals the basis from which the publishers approached the market.

Catalogues at the beginning of the period of this study continued the prevailing view of a catalogue as an all-encompassing display of a publisher’s output at a particular point in time. John Walsh’s catalogue of c. 1721 “A Catalogue of English and Italian Musick. [sic] Vocal & Instrumental” may be taken as representative (see Catalogue Plate 5-1). It presents an amalgam of 152 instrumental and vocal items, solo and concerted, sacred and secular, all somewhat casually identified and distributed across six capacious divisions. Rarely, Walsh supplemented his umbrella-type catalogues with publications focussed on vocal music (three catalogues between 1721 and 1733), one for harpsichord (1731) and one for violin (1732).²

The expansion of publishers’ repertoires from the last decades of the eighteenth century brought major changes to the structure of catalogues. As might be expected, the long-continued, more-or-less effective organisation of a small number of publications was no longer adequate for medium- or large-sized listings with 200 or more items. To improve ease of use, publishers began to introduce more precise category designators, and where a single heading had previously sufficed, sub-categories began to be added with increasing frequency.

We see evidence of this in Bland’s ‘A Catalogue of Vocal and Instrumental Music’ (BJ 1h, 1i and 1j, c. 1783, see Catalogue Plates 2-1, 2-2 and 2-3). There, three category headings are broken into two to five sub-categories. In Longman & Broderip’s catalogue ‘New Musical Publications’ (LB 3, c. 1780, see Catalogue Plates 2-8 and 2-9) the category headings “For Concerts [instrumental music]” runs to six sub-categories. This trend further developed as the nineteenth century progressed. With the main categories further divided into subordinate categories, a layered structure emerged within a catalogue. The main category, commonly printed in larger fonts, or in capitals, stood-out from the subdivision headings and the contents. The resultant ordering and distribution of the items in this way changed the visual structure of the catalogues, and would have assisted users browsing over-crowded pages (see Catalogue Plate 5-2).

At the same time, individual categories within the broad-ranging type of catalogues of the late-eighteenth century began to be converted into catalogues for a particular medium, genre or composer. The appearance of these specialized catalogues are indicative not only of the publishers’ broadening market, but also of the publishers’ efforts to appeal to distinct segments of the music-buying public with catalogues which reflected quite specific tastes and preferences. By 1840, the end result is a quite complex array of catalogues diverse in emphasis, and thus diverse in content, and diverse in size whether in the number of pages or number of items. We can glimpse something of this in the diagram below:

It is on the basis of these divisions that the present Chapter is organised. It must be emphasized, first, that no finite dates can be assigned to the appearance of composer- or genre-oriented catalogues beyond the general observation that the more specialised the catalogue type, the more likely is its later appearance, and, second, that the various types of catalogues co-existed. The emergence of a new type did not necessarily signal the demise of any existing catalogue types. Indeed, both umbrella-type and multi-medium catalogues provide a continuum throughout the period of this study.

It should also be remembered that although the following discussion treats catalogue production type by type, music items themselves were not rigidly confined. For example, the appearance of single-medium catalogues devoted to the flute from about 1800 does not mean that music for the flute was absent from other types of catalogues. There were still categories of music for the flute in multi-medium catalogues of instrumental music and also in umbrella-type catalogues and, if relevant, in composer-oriented catalogues. The isolation of catalogue types does, however, make for a convenient basis by which we can better study both their emergence (and decline) and their particular emphasis. Above all, throughout this discussion it should always be borne in mind that this ever-more complex web of catalogues is no random occurrence. Every stage in its creation, every type of catalogue result from an ever-more vigorous commercial drive to capture as efficiently as possible the attention of a market ever-increasing in size and in the diversity of its tastes and predilections.

I. UMBRELLA-TYPE CATALOGUES

I. UMBRELLA-TYPE – 1) GENERAL CLASSIFICATION

Most catalogues issued in the eighteenth-century and the large stand-alone catalogues issued throughout the period concerned in this study can be described as ‘umbrella-type’ (see Table 2). As the name suggests, this type of catalogues is all-encompassing and contain a wide range of instrumental and vocal music, from symphonies and concertos to solo sonatas, and from operas to single songs.

Although the size of umbrella-type catalogues varied greatly as to the number of items included and their number of pages, the significance of umbrella-type catalogues to us is that they best present us with an overview of a publisher’s output, and the proportions allotted to different genres and media of performance.

3 Among the eight issued in 1780, those by John Bland (BJ 1a), William Forster (FW 1a), and William Napier (NW 1b) were single folio sheet catalogues printed within music, whereas one issued by Robert Bremner and the three issued by Longman and Broderip (LB 1, LB 4, LB 5) were stand-alone productions, comprising two (folio), four (octavo), seven (octavo) and four (folio) pages respectively.

I. UMBRELLA-TYPE – II) MAKE-UP

To demonstrate the nature and makeup of the umbrella-type catalogues, we must turn to the category headings found in the catalogues. The period 1780 to 1790 was chosen for further analysis as most catalogues issued during the period were wide-ranging umbrella-type catalogues.4 Table 2-a sets out the fifty categories most frequently found in 109 umbrella-type catalogues issued during this decade.

The most frequently listed category, ‘For Concerts. Overtures, Symphonies, in parts,’ attests to the popularity of orchestral music and the growth of public concerts. As Julian Rushton puts it, this was a result of “a new kind of appreciation of instrumental music.”

It also confirms the dominance of overtures and symphonies as the most performed genres in public concerts of the period. Stanley Sadie has noted that in eighteenth-century England, ‘all concerts were orchestral’. Sadie’s statement is not entirely accurate as chamber music, which in the previous centuries was considered to be music written for the private sphere, began to appear in public concerts in London during the second half of the eighteenth century. String quartets, for instance, were performed in public concerts from the 1770s. Nevertheless, Sadie’s statement sums up the general make-up of the eighteenth-century concert repertoires, as it was unusual for any public concerts to include more than two items of chamber music, despite the fact that most concerts lasted for three hours or more.

The next seven most common categories including instrumental quartets, trios, guitar music, and duets, sonatas and lessons for the harpsichord or piano forte, as well as much of the vocal music which was published with keyboard accompaniments, were repertoires primarily aimed at the domestic setting. As Table 2-a shows, by the 1780s, London music publishers were already modelling their catalogues to cater for their largest and the most lucrative market, amateur domestic performers.

Among the instruments of domestic music making, the harpsichord or alternatively the piano forte were by far the most widely accepted media. We can also observe the popularity of the keyboard-duet medium (Table 2-a, R5) was well established by the 1780s; it was the highest ranked category of keyboard music. ‘Sonatas’ and ‘lessons’ (R6, 18 and 20) were favoured genres of solo-keyboard music of this period. The sampled categories make it clear that this group – ‘sonatas and lessons for the piano forte’ – is represented by two types, ‘with’ or ‘without accompaniments’. The former may be considered the precursors of duo sonatas (melodic instrument plus piano), piano trios, piano quartets and quintets.

Instrumental quartets feature more prominently than quintets. The category ‘[unspecified] quartets’ was the second most frequently listed category, while ‘quintets’ occupied fourth position. During the period, publishers often employed headings, such as ‘quartets,’ ‘quintets,’ ‘trios’ and ‘duets’, rather than specifying the scoring, and consequently various different combinations of instrumental ensembles appeared under these broadly-defined categories (see Catalogue Plate 5-3). Such a practice signifies the inter-changeability or flexibility of scoring. For instance, the flute part could be performed on the violin and the piano part on the harp or vice versa. Composers deliberately wrote and designated their chamber music in such a manner in order to catch a wider market.

The popularity of the violin and flute is well reflected in the category-headings. Instrumental quartets and trios usually included flute or violin, popular instruments among amateur gentlemen players. In addition, duets for two flutes or two violins were by far the most prominent duet scoring, if we exclude the four-hand keyboard medium. The frequent occurrence of the category, ‘Guitar Music’ (R3) confirms the popularity of the English guitar during the late eighteenth century.

Broadly speaking, vocal music appears under two types of category headings – language-based (categories no. 8, 16, 36, 43) and genre-based types (categories no. 15, 35, 50), or the combination of the two (categories no. 41, 49). The popularity of English-language vocal music (categories no. 8, 15, 49, 50 and part of category 12) proves that as far as vocal music was concerned native composers played a significant part.

I. UMBRELLA-TYPE – III) ORGANIZATION OF CONTENTS

Within the umbrella-type catalogues, the treatment and organization of contents varied from publisher to publisher. The sequential arrangements of categories as they appeared within the catalogues are worth noting (see Table 2-b.).

We can see that the organizational structure of these catalogues largely falls into two groups. In catalogues BS 1a, BR 1a, BluJ 1 and especially DJ 1b, publishers placed the most popular and thus most saleable music for the harpsichord as their first categories. This positioning reflects a deliberate marketing strategy, a simple, but an innovative approach which shows these publishers’ commercial awareness of the new market; it would have made this category more visible and engaged music-buyers’ attention immediately upon examination of the catalogues.

In BS 1a, although the second category ‘Harpsichord Duetts’ and the third ‘Harpsichord Music single’ could have been set out as sub-divisions of the first category, the publisher did not attempt to make this clear visually or otherwise; likewise, categories 9, 10, and 11, all subdivisions of vocal music, were not treated as sub-divided categories. A similar organizational structure can be observed in Birchall’s first catalogue. Birchall, too did not distinguish categories which are more appropriate as sub-categories from main categories.

The other publishers, Bremner (BrR 2), Bland (BlJ 1a), Forster (FW 1a) and Preston (PrJ 1e, see Catalogue Plate 5-3) chose to list their publications by the size of the medium, proceeding roughly from the larger ‘Concert music’ to smaller ensembles. ‘For Concerts’ (overtures and symphonies for orchestra-type groups) usually appears as the first category which is followed logically by ‘Quintets,’ ‘Quartets,’ ‘Trios,’ ‘Duets’ and ‘Solos’. Arrangement by the size of the medium was a frequently-used classification in umbrella-type catalogues, and it complied with the way people normally perceived music and sought out their desired repertoire, that is, by the size of the media. In other words, this approach was widespread as it presented publications in a familiar and expected manner, thus providing ease of use for readers.

These two prevalent arrangements suggest that in the eighteenth century, publishers at least were aware of the importance of arrangement of catalogue contents, and planned the organizational structure of their catalogues.

As shown in Table 2-c, umbrella-type catalogues accounted for 85% of the entire catalogue output in the 1780s. The following decade saw a sharp decrease to 35%; by the first decade of the 1800s, they accounted for only 32%; and in the 1810s, the percentage had dropped drastically to an average of 8%. In the following decades, umbrella-type catalogues made up only about 14 to 15% of the entire catalogue production. The reason for this dramatic shift was the expansion of publishers’ repertoires conflicting with the prevailing practice of printing catalogues within music publications. It has already been mentioned that the practice of printing catalogues within music items posed a limitation on the number of pages that could be allocated to catalogues. To cope with the incessant proliferation of music items within the confines of within-music catalogues, the majority of publishers resorted to a wide range of catalogues which were more restricted in scope, such as single-medium, single-composer, or single-genre varieties. Some publishers turned to the stand-alone type, already well-known through umbrella catalogues, which was not subject to page limitation. Here the expanding repertoire could be fully displayed, and several stand-alone umbrella-type catalogues from the early nineteenth century are book-like productions of over 100 pages. However, stand-alone catalogues were only occasionally issued.

The decline of umbrella-type catalogues was also associated with changes in marketing techniques. Music publishers were recognizing the advantage of more focused advertising. They must have realized that printing catalogues aimed at a particular market within music items most likely to be purchased by that segment of the market was much more effective than printing umbrella-type catalogues. As a result, extensive catalogues of flute music are more likely to be found within music written for that instrument; likewise, catalogues of chamber arrangements of symphonies and overtures are usually found within the publications of the same genres and scoring.

Finally, the decrease in the number of umbrella-type catalogues from 1790 coincided with increasing specialization within the music publishing industry, such as the emergence of publishers of flute music or harp music in the early decades of the nineteenth century. It suggests that the size of the market was sufficient to sustain small-scale operations targeted at niche markets as well as large publishing firms appealing to both specialized and more homogenous mass markets.

9 Clementi’s 1823 catalogue, CM 9 ran to 189 octavo pages. T. Boosey & Co. ‘Catalogue of Foreign Music’ issued in 1819 and comprising 216 octavo pages, has not been located. The catalogue was advertised in the Monthly Magazine, no. 47 (1819): 450.
The appearance of catalogues solely devoted to instrumental media can be attributed to the prestige instrumental music gained during the period concerned in this study. There was increasing focus on instrumental music (concerted, chamber and solo varieties) in an era unprecedented in developments that saw the range, resonance and technical capabilities of conventional instruments expanded as they were modified and improved, and then eventually mass-produced and widely distributed.

The most important change in the music-publishing industry during the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth centuries was the appearance of a new spectrum of instrumental music repertoires centred on a number of fashionable instruments, and chiefly developed to cater for the domestic amateur market. There was, of course, the ousting of the harpsichord by the piano, but there was too the welcoming of the harp and guitar, and increasing attention to violin and cello.

Medium-oriented catalogues, which record this new spectrum of instrumental repertoires, offer us clear insight into both the development and changing popularity of musical instruments throughout the period. Arguably, they provide a more precise chronology of such changes than is given even in studies devoted to particular instruments. They are our best source of information because they draw our attention directly to the instruments which were in vogue and to the music written for them. In addition, medium-oriented catalogues allow us knowledge of what was then considered to be the most favoured combinations of instruments in chamber music.

From the 1790s, instrumental medium-oriented catalogues comprised around a third of the entire catalogue production, with the exception of a five-year period between 1810 and 1814, when they reached the 69% mark (see Table 1). In these five years, 23 catalogues were issued in a total of 35 states.\textsuperscript{10}

Within the instrumental medium-oriented catalogues, we encounter two varieties: multi-medium and single-medium instrumental catalogues. Multi-medium catalogues may be defined as containing items for a variety of instruments either in a solo capacity or in various combinations. A single-medium catalogue, as its name implies, contains items solely for one instrument which may however be accompanied by another instrument.

\textsuperscript{10} Two publishing firms’ contributions outnumbered the others. Monzani (as Monzani and Hill) contributed three catalogues (MT 6b, 6c, MT 8a to 8e, and MT 11a, 11b), two for the flute and one for the harp. James Platts contributed six catalogues (PIJ 4c, PIJ 5c, PIJ 6b, PIJ 7, PIJ 9a and 9b) – four for harp, one for piano forte, and one for violin and other miscellaneous instruments.

As with the examination of category-headings in the umbrella-type catalogues, a similar breakdown of the instrumental-medium catalogues set out in Tables 3-a to 3-f provides a comprehensive overview of the various types of instrumental music which were in vogue. Tables 3-a to 3-f list by decade the most frequently found categories (ranked 1 to 10, with equal rankings included). Examination of these categories reveals the changing landscape of instrumental music.

Table 3-a reveals a broad-spectrum interest in chamber music during the period. Twenty-five of 35 categories (across all rankings) included music for one or combinations of 14 instruments: harpsichord, piano forte, organ, guitar, violin, tenor, violoncello, bass, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, French horn and harp. Overall, chamber music with violin (eight categories) or flute (four categories) dominated, although challenged by the eight categories devoted to the harpsichord or piano forte music. The table also confirms that during the 1780s, the English guitar still held its ground as a popular instrument of domestic music-making.\(^\text{12}\)

As shown in Table 3-b, by the 1790s harpsichord and piano forte were in prime position appearing in nine categories, with the piano as the alternative instrument in six of these nine categories, while harpsichord alone category had sixth ranking. More significant is the appearance of a category “For the Piano Forte” in the top rankings for the first time. Unspecified ‘duets’, ‘trios’, ‘quartets’ and ‘quintets,’ even when combined (49 occurrences) did not match the popularity of the harpsichord or piano forte. ‘Guitar music’, the category to have appeared most frequently in the 1780s had fallen to the fifth place. Concerted music is still in high rankings occupying third, fourth and sixth positions, but diversity of solo instruments has reduced from eight (harpsichord, piano forte, violin, hautboy, clarinet, German flute, violoncello and bassoon) in the previous decade to two (harpsichord and piano forte).

Table 3-c confirms that by the first decade of the nineteenth century, piano was ‘the instrument’ for domestic music-making. It had completely replaced the harpsichord and is unchallenged in the top two rankings – a huge leap from its tenth ranking in the previous decade. The table also reveals a regained popularity for the flute (six categories) and the complete fading of the guitar; ‘Guitar music’ does not even feature in the ten most frequently listed categories. Concerted music, ‘For Concerts. Overtures and Symphonies in parts’ and ‘Concertos in parts’ which occupied the third and the fourth positions in the previous decade has disappeared as well; concertos for the piano forte and for the flute are the sole surviving categories of concerted music. ‘Harp music’ shows a further increase in popularity.

Table 3-d. Categories most frequently listed in instrumental medium-oriented Catalogues issued 1810-1819 (Rankings 1 to 10 across 70 catalogue issues)
Table 3-d makes obvious the growing popularity of the harp during the 1810s; it now had top rankings, ahead even of the piano. This is by no means an indication that the quantity of harp music published during this decade exceeded that of the piano forte. Rather, it suggests that the vogue of the harp was at its peak, and music publishers were shrewd enough to capitalize. Although not in the top four rankings, the flute remained consistently popular, demonstrated through its appearance in nine of the 15 categories. Even the piano and harp each appeared only in four categories. Also noteworthy is the first appearance of categories combining two favoured instruments (flute and piano, flute and harp, and harp and piano). In fact, these three instruments solo or in ensemble, made up all categories.

Table 3-e demonstrates that the piano had regained its popularity and was well clear of any other instrument. This gain was at the expense of the harp. Although the harp and piano duo, combining the two most popular instruments, was by far the most favoured combination, the number of categories which involved harp had dropped from four in the previous decade to two. The ousting of the flute had begun and although it was still prominent across all the lower ranked categories, the categories for the flute had reduced from nine in the previous decade to six. Society’s vogue for quadrilles was well established by the 1820s.

Table 3-f presents us with a vastly altered landscape. Most noticeable is the absolute supremacy of the piano, not just in the total number of occurrences (183 out of 257), but with a role in 15 of the 25 categories. Besides the top-ranking duet and solo categories, there are four-genre related categories for piano forte which see the ‘Quadrille’ category continued from the previous decade and now joined by ‘Quadrilles’, ‘Waltzes’, ‘Mazurkas’ and ‘Rondos’. There are two arrangement categories (the long continuing ‘Overtures’ (Tables 3-a, b, and d) is now joined by ‘Operas’; six categories of the piano fort in association with one or more other instruments, and a pedagogic category, ‘Studies, Instructions’. All but one of the six flute categories have dropped to ninth and tenth rankings; the
The popularity of music for the harp has collapsed to seventh from its top rankings in the 1810s and the harp now appears in only one combination category. After three decades, music for guitar has reappeared among these top-ranked categories, but this time it is the Spanish rather than the English guitar that is favoured. Also notable is the growing number of categories devoted to string instruments—an important shift in favoured instruments beyond the piano forte. The violin, shunned since 1800, makes a vigorous return; the violoncello become prominent for the first time, and the trio scorings (string trio and piano trio) are new chamber categories.

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM-ORIENTED CATALOGUES –II) SINGLE-MEDIUM

Although single-medium catalogues first appeared in 1790, the issuing of catalogues for a single medium was not common until the nineteenth-century. The only exceptions were catalogues of harpsichord, or piano forte music issued in the 1790s by John Bland, Robert Birchall and Joseph Dale. Catalogues of harpsichord music appeared first, followed by ‘harpsichord or piano forte’ music, and these were subsequently replaced by catalogues of piano forte music. Despite the widespread popularity of the flute and the English guitar in eighteenth-century England, these two instruments did not receive the same attention in terms of single-medium catalogues as that given to the harpsichord or piano forte.

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE-MEDIUM – A) HARPSICHOARD / PIANO FORTE OR HARPSICHOARD / PIANO FORTE

Much of the expansion of the music-publishing industry was driven by the technical advances in piano manufacturing which led to the production of a variety of relatively inexpensive pianos, and subsequently raised the demand for music for the instrument. Catalogues for the harpsichord, harpsichord or piano forte, and (solely) for the piano forte when combined make up over 20% of the entire catalogue production of the London music publishers for the period of this study. They dominated the single-medium category of catalogues. As shown in Table 4, if we include various states of each catalogue, we have a total of 244 issues. A chronological breakdown is particularly illuminating.

13 The first two states of Bland’s thirteenth catalogue contain two periodical collections, one for the harpsichord (Bland’s ‘Harpsichord Collection’) and one for the piano forte (‘Le tout Ensemble’). The third and fourth states of the same catalogue are devoted to the ‘Harpsichord Collection’ only. ‘Le tout Ensemble’ then becomes joined to Bland’s Collection of Duets (BIJ 14a and 14b) as BIJ 16.

14 GG 13a contains vocal and instrumental music.

15 CS 2a, 2b and 2c contain instrumental and vocal music.
The transition from harpsichord to piano forte is signposted in the titles of catalogues issued by London music publishers, so making these valuable chronological markers of this major change in medium of performance. Bland’s sixteenth catalogue, ‘Index to Le tout Ensemble, Sonatas with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte & Index to the Duets for two Performers on One Piano Forte by the following eminent Masters’ (BIJ 16a and 16b, c. 1793) was the first catalogue designated solely as piano music. The appearance of such a catalogue indicates the growing popularity of the instrument. Bland abandoned the alternative ‘for the harpsichord or piano forte’ used in BIJ 14a and 14b in rewording the title for the thematic catalogue version of the Collection issued in the same year. He did not reissue his harpsichord catalogue (BIJ 13c and 13d) after 1793. Joseph Dale’s first catalogue devoted to the keyboard medium, ‘Dale’s Collection of Duets for two Performers on One Piano Forte, by the most Celebrated Composers’ (DJ 9a) issued in 1799, does not even mention the harpsichord as the alternative to the piano. Likewise, Bland & Weller, seem not to have thought it necessary to include “or harpsichord” in the catalogue title when they issued their ‘Duetts [sic] for Two Performers on One Piano Forte, by the most Eminent Composers’ (BW 5, c. 1797).

Catalogues designated for the harpsichord were still issued until 1800 by Robert Birchall (BR 7), who continued Bland’s harpsichord collection (BIJ 13d), which implies that, to a certain extent, the two instruments existed side by side for a considerable period of time. Although the leading English piano manufacturer, Broadwood stopped making harpsichords as early as 1794, other harpsichord manufacturers were still at work, attempting to overcome the tonal limitation of the harpsichord by fitting the instrument with innovations such as ‘Venetian swell’ and ‘nag’s head swell,’ to compete with the increasingly flexible piano.

However, by 1800, not only was the piano dominant, but it was also being constantly improved. In the third state of Bland’s expanding sixteenth catalogue, (BIJ 16c, c. 1794), a handful of works added to Le tout ensemble (numbers 34 to 37) are described as for ‘[the piano forte] with additional keys,’ a reference to the then recent development in piano construction. In England, the expansion of the piano compass from five octaves to five-and-a half, and later to six octaves, dates to the early 1790s. Bland’s addendum hints that by the time the later numbers of the periodical, Le tout ensemble were published, a sizeable number of music buyers owned the latest variety of piano ‘with additional keys’. Manufacturers in the British Isles, who produced the pianos with extended keyboards, included 16 Birchall also continued the “for the Harpsichord or Piano Forte” designation in BR 4a to 4l (to c. 1803).

19 In the previous year, one of the three works added to Le Tout Ensemble in BIJ 16b (No. 33) is also designated as for the piano forte with additional keys.
Broadwood, Longman & Broderip, Clementi, and Southwell. Among them, Longman & Broderip and Clementi were also eminent music publishers.

On the whole, the production of single medium (piano) catalogues closely followed the development of the instrument. (See Table 4-a). Arthur Loesser deems the advertisement of the music instrument maker, Frederic Neubaur, which appeared in Mortimer’s London Universal Directory of 1763 as the first recorded evidence of the existence of the instrument in the country. By 1800 there were 45 piano manufacturers in London, and within another 40 years, English piano manufacturers claimed a leading role among European countries in the technological development of the instrument. The popularity and sales of the piano forte were more prominent in England than in any city on the continent. English pianos were considered superior to the continental pianos in quality and workmanship, and the affluent English middle-class had the economic power to purchase the “new” instrument. In addition, the population of London made the mass production of the piano economically feasible. The combination of these factors – technology, capitalism and a sizeable market – provided an environment conducive to the prospering music business.

In the 1790s, Broadwood was manufacturing about 400 squares and over 100 grand pianos per year; by the 1820s, the firm’s annual production reached 1000 squares and 400 grand pianos. The booming piano manufacturing industry in England is also attested to by astonishing variety of 23 pianos offered by the firm of Clementi, in the firm’s 1823 catalogue (CM 9). With prices varying from 32 to 250 guineas, this range catered for nearly all classes of purchasers, from pianos within the reach of the lower middle class to the pianos exclusively produced for the wealthy middle class and the nobility.

Considered together, Tables 3 and 3-a make clear, first, the eclipse of the harpsichord; second, the clear dominance of the piano forte from 1805; third, its subsequent overwhelming acceptance and the huge rise in the demand for the instrument from the 1820s, the first decade of peace and economic growth after the Napoleonic wars; and finally, publishers flocking to produce piano music, recognizing its commercial value, and the outpouring of associated catalogues.

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE-MEDIUM – A) HARPSCICHORD / PIANO FORTE OR HARPSCICHORD / PIANO FORTE – a) DUET REPETOIRES

It is worth remarking that the first piano catalogues were devoted to the four-hand medium. In part, there may not have been sufficient solo repertoire available, and to some extent, the duet setting was most fashionable especially for the genteel young ladies who were rapidly taking up the instrument. The extended compass of the piano may well have encouraged and offered greater possibilities to composers to write and arrange music for four-hands on this instrument.

As we have seen, as early as 1793, Bland issued a catalogue specifically for the four-hand combination: ‘Bland's Collection of Duetts for two Performers on One Harpsichord or Piano Forte by the following Eminent Composers.’ (B1J 14a and 14b) and immediately offered (together with Le tout Ensemble) as “Duetts for two Performers on One Piano Forte” in B1J 16. Bland and Weller followed with ‘Duetts for the Two Performers on One Piano Forte, by the most Eminent Composers’ (BW5), in 1797, and Joseph Dale’s ‘Dale's Collection of Duets for two Performers on One Piano Forte by the most Celebrated Composers’ (DJ 9a) appeared in 1799. By 1800, in all, Bland was offering 25 items in duet form. 39 Bland & Weller, 36 items and Joseph Dale, 40 items (see Table 4-b).

There is no doubt that the steady appearance of catalogues devoted to the four-hand medium from 1793 is a remarkable indicator of the demand for the new repertoire for the new instrument and of music publishers’ finely-tuned commercial instincts sensing the moment to bring out catalogues, and even anticipating the rising demand and the increasing profitability of the medium.

From 1800, the four-hand repertoire is surpassed by solo repertoire with ten solo catalogues (in multiple states) appearing by 1811. Nonetheless, duets were continued in five new catalogues (BR 6, 40 LL3, BR 11, MiC 3 and BJ 2) and three further states of Dale’s 1799 catalogue. What accounted 39 B1J 14b contains 22 duets; both B1J 16b and 16c contain 25 duets, of which 22 are identical to B1J 14b.

40 Birchall continued and expanded “Bland’s Collection of Duett's” (B1J 14a and 14b) and retained the Harpsichord/piano forte alternative.
for the absence of catalogues given over to this medium between 1816 and 1822 remains unclear; perhaps the extended compass piano was no longer a novelty by the early 1810s, so that although music for four-hands continued to be published, publishers did not devote catalogues to this medium.\(^{41}\)

From the early 1820s, duet catalogues began to reappear. William Hodsoll issued one catalogue (HoW 5) in three states over a period of six years; Samuel Chappell contributed one catalogue (CS 12), with all of its three states issued in 1834; and Paine and Hopkinson issued one (PH 1) in 1835. The re-emergence of duet catalogues can be attributed to a number of developments in piano mechanism which extended the capability of the instrument in terms of sonorities and dynamic effects. One of the driving forces behind these various improvements was ‘the interest in operatic music; the piano was expected to imitate the sound of massed instruments, yet also the subtleties of tremolos of violin’.\(^{42}\) Iron bracing and heavier strings introduced in the 1820s enhanced the resonance of the instrument; Erard’s double-action mechanism enabled a rapid execution on the instrument, and with the compass extended to six octaves, the piano was becoming a powerful instrument, an ideal vehicle for conveying symphonic repertoires and a “household orchestra”.

\(^{41}\) Duet categories are retained in multi-medium catalogues throughout the period of this study. From 1800 the designation is for the piano forte. See Tables 3-c to 3-f.

\(^{42}\) Sumner, The Pianoforte, p. 55.

\(^{43}\) Catalogue contents identical to LL 3a, but with altered publisher’s imprint.

\(^{44}\) The number of entries is the same as in 9c, but an addition is made to the last entry to include Handel’s March, from ‘Handel’s Water Piece’ to ‘Handel’s Water Piece & March’. The imprint is also altered to Joseph Dale, from Joseph Dale & Son in the previous state.
The shift from original works to arrangements in duet-writing is reflected in the ratio of original versus arrangements in the duet-medium catalogues shown in Table 4-b. A significant increase in the proportion of arrangements comes in 1805 with Dale’s catalogue (DJ 9b). The four-hand arrangements themselves reveal much of the performance practice and the two distinct areas of repertoire favoured at the time. On the one hand, there is a never diminishing body of items devoted to arrangements of Handel’s oratorios, and on the other, a continually up-dated body of items centred on the operatic and symphonic compositions of continental composers.

Arrangements of choruses especially, and of arias from Handel’s oratorios are universal in most publishers’ catalogues from Bland’s of the early-1790s (BlJ 14a/16a, 14b/16b) to Chappell’s issued forty years later (CS 12a, 12b and 12c). Their presence reflects the unchanging affection of the English public for Handel demonstrated since 1784 in the many Handel ‘Commemorations’ in London, and across the country in the programmes of the ever-increasing number of musical festivals and choral societies. While the four-hand arrangements of Handel’s oratorios provided stability, the other side of the duet catalogues was in a constant state of flux. The nature of the items remained more or less the same, the only difference between the earliest and the latest catalogues were the names of the composers represented and accordingly the works.

Tables 4-c to 4-f demonstrate this ongoing renewal of repertoire which made the duet medium a potent force for the constant updating of English musical taste. ‘Bland’s Collection of Duettts for two Performers on One Harpsichord or Piano Forte …’ for instance, contains eight arrangements (Handel’s ‘Water Music’ and a Coronation Anthem [‘Zadok the Priest’]; overtures from operas by Arne, a rondo by Garth; songs by Stamitz and Graeff; and a movement from a favourite overture by Haydn). Chappell’s catalogue, ‘A Catalogue of Duets for two Performers on the Piano Forte’ (CS 12) included arrangements of operas and symphonies of Auber, Bellini, Himmel, Mayer, Meyerbeer, Mozart, Rossini, Weber, Beethoven, Cherubini, Boieldieu, Haydn and Mehul.

By the 1830s, English composers were seldom the subject of arrangements. Instead, the duet medium offered a profitable occupation, with many Englishmen – William Watts, Francis Tatton Latour, Stephen Francis Rimbault, John Freckleton Burrowes – becoming arrangers for specific publishers.

Without a doubt, the duet medium was aimed at reproducing popular operatic and symphonic repertoires in domestic settings. Although many middle-class households could afford the piano, public concerts were still expensive to attend in the first decades of the nineteenth century. That the piano-duet medium was considered a more suitable vehicle than the piano-solo medium for transcriptions of the operatic or symphonic repertoires also points to the mainstay of the music publishers’ market – the amateur performer, as four-hand arrangements or transcriptions often were much easier than solo transcriptions.

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE-MEDIUM – A) HARPSCICHORD / PIANO FORTE OR HARPSCICHORD / PIANO FORTE – b) REPERTOIRES FOR THE PIANO (OTHER THAN DUETS)

Solo repertoires for the piano forte as outlined in Table 4-g demonstrate the supremacy of light-weight repertoires which were aimed at the domestic amateur performers. Most popular of all were airs with variations, closely followed rondos.

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE MEDIUM – B) FOR THE HARPS

That the piano was not without its competitors is demonstrated by medium-oriented catalogues issued for three other popular instruments, the harp, the German flute, and the guitar.

Again, the single-medium catalogues for the harp closely follow the advancement and popularity of the instrument. The pedal harp was introduced to England in the 1770s; the appearance of treatises on the instrument can be dated to the second half of the 1780s. Samuel, Ann and Peter Thompson’s (dated) catalogue (TS 2, umbrella-type; 1 October, 1786) listed an anonymous treatise, Pedal Harp Instructions. Longman & Broderip’s (dated) March 1789 catalogue (LB 15, umbrella-type) contained a treatise for the pedal harp by François Hippolyte Barthelemon (1741-1808), which had been published about fourteen months earlier, based on the entry date at the Stationers’ Hall. That the pedal harp seems to have grown rapidly in popularity by the early 1790s is borne out as ‘music for the pedal harp’ begins to appear as a separate category in the multi-medium catalogues issued by Dale (DJ 7a, c. 1794) and in the umbrella-type catalogue issued by Preston (PrJ 3, c. 1790).

The single-action pedal mechanism was considered revolutionary in the development of the instrument. Nonetheless, the instrument’s inability to play in all keys still placed restrictions on composing and performing music on the instrument. However, in 1810, Sébastien Erard took out an English patent for a double-pedal mechanism that overcame these restrictions. His invention which enabled the harp to be played in and modulate to any key made it a fully chromatic instrument.

By 1823 Clementi was advertising three types of instrument: a single-action harp priced from 75 guineas, a double-action harp from 110 guineas, and a small Irish harp from 25 guineas in his catalogue CM 9. When compared to the prices of piano forte in the same catalogue, the lowest priced harp was seven guineas less than the simplest square-piano; single-action harps were within the price range of most cabinet pianos; the double-action harp could cost as much as upright or horizontal grand pianos. As with the piano, there was a variety of harps to suit the needs of the upper as well as the lower middle classes.

49 In later catalogues, publishers no longer specify ‘pedal’ harp. The pedal harp had become ‘standard,’ (replacing the hook-harp) so there was probably no confusion over which harp the works were intended for.
50 The instrument was tuned to E flat, and each of the seven pedals could be used once to raise a semitone allowing additional keys to be played on the instrument, which meant that composers could write for the harp in the keys of E flat, B flat, F, C, G, D, A, and E major, and C, G, D, A, and E minor.

All 18 catalogues of music for the harp issued by London music publishers within the period of this study (set out in Table 5), date from the nineteenth century; the earliest, issued by James Platts (PIJ 4a), may be dated c. 1803. Ten of the 18 were seen in multiple states with Platts’ catalogue PIJ 9 first issued in 1810 reaching its seventh state by 1820. Fourteen catalogues date from 1810 onwards; this significant increase may be directly attributed to the arrival of the double action harp.

\(^{56}\) Kastner, “The Harp,” 5.
One factor contributing to the popularity of the harp was the vogue for the instrument among the upper class in pre-Revolutionary France and the émigré families were imitated by the English upper class. Perhaps even more than the piano, the harp soon gained popularity among ladies of English middle-class society, becoming a desirable instrument, a symbol of status, and a channel to emulate the cultured upper-class. The harp enhanced the prevailing view of the place of women in the performance of music. Of all the instruments, it was considered best capable of displaying the beauty and grace of women. As Rensch described it, “Young ladies of the later eighteenth century had found a most acceptable way to display pretty arms and a ‘well-turned’ ankle.”\(^{57}\) Like the piano, the harp was also a subject of the music education of young ladies as one of the ‘female accomplishments,’ and its importance was second only to the piano forte.

The harp also had an aura of ‘foreignness,’ another element which helped secure its popularity among fashionable circles in England. Most of the distinguished virtuosi and influential composers for the instrument were foreigners, and many were French, such as François Joseph Dizi (1780-1840), N. C. Bochsa, Johann Baptist Krumpholtz (1745-1790), Madame (Ann-Marie) Krumpholtz (1766-1813), Madame (Dorette) Spohr (1787-1834) and Théodore Labarre (1805-1870).

The presence of Bochsa in London's music scene from 1817 to 1839 is known to have had a profound impact on the vogue for the harp in England.\(^{58}\) As a performer and teacher of the harp his influence was unmatched. As a composer for the instrument the émigré's dominance can be gleaned from the contents of harp catalogues issued from about 1822 (see Table 5-a). The increase in listings of his music between 1826 and 1837 is quite astonishing not only in proportion to works by other composers, but also in the actual number of publications. He firmly established himself as one of the most prolific and most published composers of harp music of the time and Thomas Boosey's catalogue of 1837, 'New harp Music, Principally composed and Arranged by N.C. Bochsa' (BoT 8) paid tribute.

Unlike the catalogues for the piano forte which are ubiquitous in many publishers’ catalogue production, those for the harp are prominent only in the output of a few publishers. James Platts, who began publishing music around 1790, appears to have specialized in harp music. Five of his 11 catalogues were for the harp; and three of his multi-medium catalogues (PlJ 1, 2 and 3) contain a substantial amount of harp music (see Table 5-b).

Nothing suggests that Platts manufactured harps or played the instrument.\textsuperscript{60} However, the catalogues themselves hint that he may well have been a harpist, as his own compositions for the harp are listed in his catalogues, and his strong connection with the instrument is even seen in his imprint which often includes: ‘at his Magazine for the harp music,’ ‘Where may be had the greatest Variety of Harp Music,’ ‘Where may be had every Publication for the Harp extant.’\textsuperscript{61}

Most of Platt’s catalogues contain popular airs arranged for the harp, and there is considerable overlap of the contents of the catalogues. Nonetheless from his first single-medium catalogue for the harp in 1803 to the last issue in 1820, the number of items in each issue far outstripped the offerings of his rivals Dale, Birchall, Monzani, Skillern and Falkner. Between them these firms issued five harp catalogues in ten states; Platts issued five catalogues in 12 states.\textsuperscript{62} After 1820 no publisher so dominated the production of catalogue of music for the harp. Goulding, Falkner, Preston, Chappell, Boosey and the Royal Harmonic Institution each issued one or two catalogues. Only in the apparent rivalry between Chappell and Goulding, 1831-1835, did the number of items per catalogue surpass Platts’ figures.

Although invariably titled “music for harp” (the basis for single-medium classification) Table 5-c shows that a number of these catalogues included music for harp in combination with another instrument, usually the piano. Platts again stands out, four of his five catalogues are devoted solely to music for the harp.\textsuperscript{63} Only Chappell’s monster catalogue CS 11a (1831) and 11b (1834) followed suit. Interestingly, Chappell’s other catalogue of more than 300 items (CS 13, 1831) was devoted entirely to duets for harp and piano.

\textsuperscript{60} James Platts is not mentioned in John S. Sainsbury’s \textit{A Dictionary of Musicians from the Earliest Times}, or in other reference materials on the harp and harpists.

\textsuperscript{61} In 1806 Platts described himself as “Publisher of Harp Music” in an advertisement in the \textit{Morning Chronicle} 13 January 1806.

\textsuperscript{62} There seems no obvious explanation why Platts ceased to issue catalogue for the harp in 1820. He continued in business to 1834, but seems to have brought out no catalogues after the fourth state of PJ 8 in 1822.

\textsuperscript{63} Items were for unaccompanied harp and harp with accompaniments.
II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE-MEDIUM – C) FOR THE FLUTE

The flute was the preferred instrument of amateur gentlemen; the equivalent of the fashionable piano forte for women. Like the piano and the harp, the flute also underwent modification and improvement in its construction during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries (see Table 6). The accepted inherent defects of dubious intonation and an uneven scale were problems that remained largely unresolved until the last quarter of the eighteenth century.\(^64\) Numerous improvements were made the next half \(^{64}\) Philip Bate, The Flute: A Study of Its History, Development and Construction (London Ernest Benn, 1969; reprint, 1979), 93-98. In England, Richard Potter took out a patent for the flute with pewter-plug keys and metal-lined tuning slide in 1785. The original inventor of the keyed-flute has been much disputed, however, the keyed-flute, or flute with additional keys had become common by the turn of the eighteenth century.

century, until the varieties of flutes available far outnumbered those for any other instrument. Clementi’s 1823 catalogue CM 9 listed 86 varieties of flutes comprising 1- to 8-keyed flutes; flutes with metal, elastic, silver or leather plug keys; flutes made from ivory, ebony and cocoa to box-wood; and flutes of various sizes and descriptions. The most expensive instruments were Charles Nicholson’s improved flutes made of ivory with eight silver keys at £14. 14s. 0d (14 guineas); the simplest English plain flutes were offered at 5s. 0d. 65

The popularity of the flute is already evident in eighteenth-century music publishers’ umbrella-type catalogues which include categories for it both as a solo and as an accompanying instrument, but single-medium catalogues of repertoire for the German flute only appear after 1800. Probably the earliest is John Fentum’s ‘Catalogue of Flute Music’ (FJ 3a) issued ca. 1800. As with the catalogues for the harp, those devoted to flute music were concentrated among a small number of publishers – Cocks & Co., issued five; Monzani (or as Monzani and Hill) issued four; Clementi issued three; Thomas Lindsay issued two; Charles Wheatstone issued four; Wessel & Co. and Fentum each issued one catalogue for the flute (see Table 5). Again, the emergence of the single-medium catalogue for flute, like those for piano and harp is a barometer of early-nineteenth century taste and performance predilection.

Analysis of the single-medium catalogues in Table 6-a reveals that the flute was never a “solo” instrument to the extent of the piano or harp. It was frequently employed with the piano or stringed instruments, in various trio, quartet and quintet combinations. This may explain its sustained popularity throughout almost all the period of this study. Single-medium flute catalogues were issued in a continuous stream except for the unexplained gap between 1816 and 1823. 1806 brought a dramatic increase in the contents of flute catalogues, and from then on, there was a general rise in the production of flute music, led by the firm of Monzani up to 1826.

Theobald Monzani (1762-1830) specialised in publishing flute music and manufacturing flutes. He had arrived in London in 1785 and held a position as principal flautist at the King’s Theatre. He began to make flutes from about 1803, advertising his firm as ‘Manufacturers of the new Improved German Flute, without Tread, & c.’ in MT 6c and as ‘Patentees of the New Improved German Flute and Durable Clarinet’ in MT 11 and MT 13. Monzani had been publishing music since 1798, but produced his first catalogue devoted to the flute only in 1807. Possibly the dissolution of his partnership with Cimador in 1807, which left Monzani sole in charge of the business, meant he was able to pursue his specialties, manufacturing and designing flutes and publishing music for the flute. Even after Henry Hill’s subsequent entry into partnership with him, flute music occupied a central part in Monzani’s instrumental medium catalogues. The sudden cessation of Monzani’s flute catalogues after 1826 may have anticipated Monzani’s withdrawal from the publishing business in 1829.

The last state of Monzani’s last single-medium catalogue ‘Plate 20 & 21. Catalogue of Flute Music’ (MT 14g) deserves special consideration. It was the largest flute catalogue issued by Monzani, and it presents us with a comprehensive overview of the types of flute music most popular at that time through the numerous and quite specific categories under which its 431 items were organized (see Table 6-b).

As shown in Tables 6-b and 6-c, solo medium catalogues give a detailed insight into the diversity of small scale domestic music-making – almost all possible combinations which involved the flute are catered for and suggest an almost continual background of music for every occasion. In duet scoring, the flute was most frequently joined with the piano (44.9%); with another flute (32.7%), with the voloncello (11.8%), and with the harp (9.1%). Combination of three flutes was the most common trio scoring (43%); and that of flute, violin, tenor and violoncello was the most popular quartet scoring (53.3%).

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE MEDIUM – D) FOR THE GUITAR

Although not as popular as the flute or harp, the English and Spanish guitars had each enjoyed a rather brief period of popularity, the English guitar in the second half of the eighteenth century, and the Spanish guitar in the first half of the nineteenth century. There are no publishers’ catalogues devoted to music for the English guitar as the instrument’s popularity peaked some decades before the appearance of single-medium catalogues.

In England, the Spanish guitar became popular from the early 1820s, reaching a peak in the early 1830s, which culminated in the appearance of a journal exclusively devoted to the instrument. The Giulianiad, named after the guitar virtuoso, Mauro Giuliani (1781-1829), was first published in 1833, to survive only a couple of years. The appearance of two of the three single-medium catalogues for the instrument between 1830 and 1833 springs directly from these few years of popularity – a clear-cut response from music publishers, chronologically pinpointing the momentary fame of a fleetingly fashionable instrument. William Wybrow’s catalogue, ‘Select Guitar Music’ (WW3), is dated c. 1830; the three states of Samuel Chappell’s ‘A Catalogue of Guitar music, and songs, & c. with Guitar accompaniment’ (CS 15) are dated 1831, 1832 and 1833 respectively.

75 The vogue for the English guitar is said to have posed a serious threat to harpsichord and spinet makers, and its fleeting attraction is clear from Charles Burney’s often cited remark that the ladies, who disposed of or exchanged their harpsichord for the purchase of a cheap and popular guitar, soon discovered the instrument to be frivolous and vulgar in taste, and returned to the harpsichord. Coggin, “This Easy and Agreeable Instrument,” 206; Grunfeld, The Art and Times of the Guitar, 130; Loesser, Men, Women and Pianos, 218.
76 Music for the English guitar appeared as a category within umbrella type and multi-medium catalogues. See Tables 1-a, 2-a and 2-b.

The appearance in London of virtuoso performers, Fernando Sor (1778-1839), Ferdinando Carulli (1770-1841), Dionisio Aguado (1784-1849) and the journal The Giulianiad (1833-34), would have contributed to recognition of the guitar as a serious instrument. However, contents of guitar catalogues show that much of the guitar music offered to public was for the voice and guitar. Its popularity and popular function in the period was very much an instrument to accompany the voice. Songs with guitar accompaniment were in fashion; here the limited powers of the instrument were beneficial, though detrimental to its success as a solo instrument.

A single-medium catalogue again provides information on repertoire, performance practice and taste, unlikely to be so detailed in the guitar literature. Table 7-a illustrates the range of guitar music sought by the public; and Table 7-b indicates that over 80% of items in Chappell’s guitar catalogue were for the voice and guitar.

82 Criticism of the limited sonority of the guitar is frequently found in the contemporary journals. “The powers of the guitar are little adapted to anything beyond an accompaniment, and this too of the simplest kind.” “The Spanish Guitar,” QMMR 6, no. 24 (1824): 546.

The guitar like the harp was also recognized as another fitting instrument – or at least a recommended instrument – for women. It was considered an elegant instrument which ‘forms a line of beauty,’ and ‘may be managed gracefully.’ Besides being a prop of social elegance, the popularity of the guitar can be related to the cheapness of the instrument. Again Clementi’s 1823 catalogue (CM 9) is informative. It lists both the English and Spanish guitar and among the eight models on offer, the prices of the English guitar varied from £4. 4s. 0d to £6. 16s. 6d. and of the Spanish guitar from £5. 15s. 6d. to £8. 8s. 0d for an “elegant” instrument. Any model was well below the price of a piano forte or harp. Even the best quality guitar could be procured at only a third of the cost of the most humble variety of piano. Paradoxically, the cheapness and the portability of the instrument were the very reasons that the guitar was viewed as a lesser instrument in the nineteenth century; by comparison, the piano was held to be an emblem of wealth, culture, and an article of prized furniture in the middle-class household. Certainly, the guitar was less solid (a good middle class value) and ephemeral (easily damaged).

83 Both CS 15a and CS 15b contain an additional category, ‘Instruction Books’ (3 entries) each; CS 15a contains a further additional category ‘Madame Malibran’s Tyroliennes’ (2 entries.). The category ‘German and Swiss Songs, with Guitar accompaniment is listed in CS 15c.
II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE-MEDIUM CATALOGUES – E) FOR THE VIOLIN AND VIOLONCELLO

Only a handful of single-medium catalogues were devoted to the violin (KR 1, PIJ 11, CR 24a and 24b). Table 8 shows the emergence of violin, its lesser popularity compared to the flute obvious from the lack of catalogues. The late appearance of the only single-medium catalogue for the violoncello (CR 25a and 25b) suggests a rather small hold on the amateur market. However, music for the violin or for the violoncello appeared throughout the period of this study in multi-medium and umbrella-type catalogues. These statistics warn against drawing conclusions on the basis of a single type of catalogue.

II. INSTRUMENTAL MEDIUM – II) SINGLE MEDIUM – F) SUMMARY

The preponderance of medium-oriented catalogues suggests that the general music-buying public was more inclined to rely on medium rather than genre or composer as their first point of reference when examining a catalogue. It also signals that in general, music publishers regarded medium above genre or composer. This deliberate emphasis placed on the medium of performance in sale catalogues was directly connected to the interests of music publishers, as the profit lay in publishing music written for fashionable instruments and their increasing numbers of performers. The cultivation of a number of fashionable instruments particularly appropriate for the domestic market played a significant part in this medium-oriented marketing of music. The importance of the piano, in particular, as a domestic music instrument, is seen not only in the number of catalogues devoted to this instrument, but also in the numerous catalogues issued for other instruments which almost always included the piano as an accompanying (usually obligato) instrument.

III. COMPOSER-ORIENTED CATALOGUES – UMBRELLA AND INSTRUMENTAL

Composer-oriented catalogues were predominantly those that concentrated on the oeuvre of a single composer. However, catalogues with items organized under the names of several individual composers can also be considered as ‘composer-oriented’. In this type of catalogue, the focus shifted... from medium to composer or from genre to composer. In such cases, we may assume that concentration on a particular composer or grouping of composers was considered commercially more beneficial than any other elements in the marketing of music.

In England, composer-oriented catalogues only began to emerge in the second half of the 1790s. A composer element was rarely promoted as categories within umbrella-type of multi-medium, or genre catalogues issued in the eighteenth century. The exceptions are William Forster’s thematic catalogue devoted to the symphonies, overtures and quartets by Haydn, issued in 1787, and categories such as “Handel’s Songs” and “[Selections from] Handel’s oratorios”. The special treatment given to Haydn shows the popularity of the composer’s works and his status as one of the most revered composers in late eighteenth- and early nineteenth-century England. It even anticipated the enthusiastic reception Haydn received during his two visits to England, in 1791 and 1794.

These exceptions aside, we may assume the use of the composer element whether providing categories within a catalogue or as a basis of a catalogue to be largely an innovation of the nineteenth century.

Table 10 confirms that composer-oriented catalogues were very much a nineteenth-century phenomenon, and their production peaked form 1815 to 1824. During the five-year period from 1815 to 1819, the number of composer-oriented catalogues rose from 12 to 28 an increase of 67% over the figures of the preceding five years. The figures of the next decade show a further increase of almost 40%. Behind this dramatic increase were the single-composer catalogues devoted to Joseph Gelinek’s airs with variations (BR 16a, CS 3, CM 4, FH 2) and the vocal music catalogue (PoJ 2a to 2g) issued by James Power, for the works by his two house-composers, Thomas Moore and John Stevenson.

86 See Catalogue Plate 6-1, p. 305.

Other composer-oriented catalogues which appeared during the five-year period include catalogues devoted to composers, E. S. Biggs (BR 5k), John Fleckton Burrowes (BR 15a and 15b), Friedrich Joseph Kirmair (GG 9a), Thomas Attwood (MT 10c), John Parry (BW 8), George Kiallmark (CS 4), William Crotch (CS 5), Gioacchino Rossini (FH 3a), Charles Michel Sola (FH 4), David Bruguier (MW 3), Joseph Mazzinghi (GG 10) and catalogues of self-publishing composers, George Eugene Griffin (GrG 2), C. CM 2* is classified under genre-oriented catalogues.
As shown in Table 10-a, the nature of the composer-oriented catalogues varied. At one end of the spectrum, we have popular composers, foreign and domestic, who were promoted for publishers’ commercial advantage. At the other end, there was a group of composers best described as self-publishing composers. In between came the promotion of house-composers and on-the-spot composers. For example, Josef Mazzinghi was Goulding’s house composer; and Henri Herz seems to have had a similar relationship with D’Almaine and Co.

Catalogues devoted to Beethoven, Mozart and Gelinek\(^{88}\) represent commercial exploitation on popular composers; the established reputation of such composers was the attraction and so the composers’ names were most visibly marketed above consideration of genre or medium or even the quality of the music.

Self-publishing was not new to the period and composer-initiated marketing existed well before the period concerned in this study. For instance, publishing by subscription, that is, collecting capital from purchasers in advance to meet the publishing costs was one of the ways by which composers published their own works.\(^{89}\) In this way, composers could minimize the financial risks involved in publishing. Composers also published at their own expense and in such cases, ‘printed for the author’ usually appeared in the imprint on music title pages.\(^{90}\)

Catalogues of music by Edward Smith Biggs (BR 5) and John Freckleton Burrowes (1787-1852) offer two sides of the self-publishing category. Biggs was a self-publishing composer who had most of his music printed by Birchall, probably at his own expense. Birchall maintained this distinction, keeping Biggs’ music separate from his other publications by issuing single-composer catalogues and by segregated advertisements.\(^{91}\)

Burrowes promoted himself thorough numerous catalogues which he prepared himself. This is evident from the same catalogue plates occasionally printed within music items by Burrowes brought out by several publishers.\(^{92}\) He concentrated almost entirely of popular piano pieces written for \(^{88}\) See Chapter 6 for further discussion on Gelinek.

\(^{89}\) In February 1801 William Horsley advertised his “Proposals for Publishing by Subscription a Collection of Glee, Canons, Rounds, &c.; …Subscriptions received by the Author …” Morning Chronicle 21 February 1801

\(^{90}\) Some music publishers appeared to have offered services to self-publishing composers. Wheastone added a note to his ‘1806 Annual Collection of New Music’ (WC 2) “Authors’ works neatly engraved & Printed.” Composers who may have availed themselves of such services include Nicholas Rolfe: “A Sonata, for the Piano-Forte … Printed for the Author, No. 112, Cheapside …” and G. G. Ferrari: “A Martial Air … Printed for the Author, and to be had of him, No. 42, Broad-street, Golden-Square.” (Morning Chronicle, 12 February 1812 and 26 October 1813). Both composers sold to the public from their own residences.

\(^{91}\) On 1 May 1801 Birchall advertised in the Morning Chronicle “New Music - This day is published, Fatherless Fanny, a favourite Ballad …composed by Mr Biggs …printed by Robert Birchall …133 New Bond Street …where may be had …all [his] other Works” and on 2 May Birchall inserted an advertisement for nine compositions all by different composers. Biggs was not mentioned.

domestic amateur performers: airs with variations, arrangements of Scottish and Irish airs, and arrangements of popular operas. A similar situation occurs with Auguste Bertini. He maintained his own catalogue (an engraved plate) constantly updating it, reaching nine states, and apparently supplying it to each publisher currently printing his latest compositions. As we have seen, between 1831-1832 his piano music was published by 41 publishers (possibly at his own expense) (see Catalogue Plate 5-4). Like Burrowes, Bertini wrote for immediate consumption. His output was concentrated solely on easy piano pieces in popular genres, fantasies, marches and waltzes. The contents of Bertini’s and Burrowes’ catalogues suggest such composers read the prevailing tastes well to gain entry to a market less concerned with quality than with supply. The catalogues also suggest a market and social conditions conducive to such efforts. For instance, the continually updated catalogue issued by Bertini demonstrates the composer’s dogged self-promotion. That he could involve over forty different firms in publishing his music suggests that he might have had some success.

93 See Chapter 3 for a fuller discussion of the states and dating of Bertini’s catalogue, pp. 115-17.
The names of publishers are given in the right hand column.
Several types of composer-oriented catalogues may be established and a classification attempted based on four primary types are set out in Table 10-a. The classification is based on the catalogue title, contents, and category and sub-category headings appearing within each individual catalogue.

III. COMPOSER-ORIENTED CATALOGUES – 1) SINGLE-COMPOSER, MULTI-MEDIUM / MULTI-GENRE

These are perhaps the least specialized types of composer-oriented catalogues. Together they comprise 78% of composer-oriented catalogues.

Among single-composer, multi-medium type of catalogues, we have Cocks & Co.’s ‘New Music. Composed by Maria Hinckesman, teacher of the Sostenente [sic] and Piano Forte’ (CR 3) contains vocal music and instrumental music. Similarly, Falkner’s ‘Select Catalogue of Music, for the Piano-Forte, Vocal, Organ, and Harp, by Edwin Merriott’ (FH 18) comprises works written for various media.

Single-composer, multi-genre type of catalogue presented a diverse range of repertoires by individual composers. Goulding’s single composer catalogue devoted to works of Joseph Mazzinghi, ‘A Complete Catalogue of the works of Joseph Mazzinghi’ (GG 5a to 5g) is such an example. The last state (GG 5g) contains an assortment of vocal and instrumental genres: sonatas for the piano forte (Opp. 1, 2, 4, 5, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 28, 29, 30, 34, 36, 39, 45 and 46), operas (Opp. 6, 7, 21, 41 and 43), ballets (Opp. 17, 20, 26 and 32), divertissements, and airs (Opp. 8, 11, 22 and 38), music for military band (Opp. 31, 33, 40 and 44), operas adapted for two flutes or two violins (Opp. 23 and 37), duets for the piano forte (Opp. 13 and 35), instruction books (Opp. 24 and 25), concertante for piano forte, flute, two violins, tenor and violoncello (Op. 42), quartets for piano, flute, violin and tenor (Op. 3), duets for two flutes or two violins (Op. 12), and sonatas arranged as duets for piano forte (Op. 27).

III. COMPOSER-ORIENTED CATALOGUES – II) SINGLE-COMPOSER, SINGLE-MEDIUM / SINGLE-GENRE

In the single-composer, single-medium type of catalogue both the composer’s name and the medium is specified in the catalogue title. For instance, ‘New Pianoforte Music, by Charles Czerny’ (CR 10a to 10e) issued by Cocks & Co. and an identically-titled catalogue for the works of François Hünten, ‘New Pianoforte Music, by François Hünten’ (CR 27a to 27c). These two catalogues which substantially swell the numbers of composer-oriented catalogues in the 1830s, contain an astonishing diversity of genres of piano forte music including rondos, divertimentos, marches, fantasies, variations, impromptus, quadrilles, polonaises, polacca, sonatas, studies, bagatelles, waltzes, concertos, operas arranged for the piano forte (solo and duets), symphonies arranged as duets, overtures arranged as duets, and Handel’s choruses arranged as duets. However, the titles of these two catalogues make it clear that the primary focus was on the composer and medium rather than genre. In fact, their contents are not arranged by genres, but divided into categories such as ‘Easy Music,’ ‘of moderate difficulty,’ and ‘Difficult and very brilliant Pieces for the First Class of Pianists’. This is a clever yet helpful device, immediately presenting a broad repertoire suited to a prospective customer's known (or assumed) ability. In this way a search among so many genres for items of suitable technical difficulty is avoided and selection is simplified and hastened.

Overall, the single-composer, single-medium catalogues are not numerous. However, 11 of the 14 catalogues (24 of 31 issues) fall between 1823 and 1840, and of these 24 issues, 13 comprise various states of six catalogues issued by Cocks and Co. Of these single-composer, single-medium catalogues, with two exceptions, all are for the piano. This, together with chronological concentration of the catalogues, reinforces the total dominance of the keyboard.

It is instructive to put the single-composer, single-medium catalogue alongside the single-composer, single-genre catalogues. Again, the composer’s name and genre are specified in the title. Most of these, too, fall in a compact grouping, but about a decade earlier; with one exception, all of these catalogues for instrumental-medium fall between 1814 and 1821. The catalogues in this group are again for the piano, but this time they all promote the rondo and air, with variations genre, fashionable for those a few years.

III. COMPOSER-ORIENTED CATALOGUES – III) SUMMARY

Single-composer catalogues, although often ranging widely to include works written for various media and in various genres, are a form of specialized catalogues. This type of catalogue well illustrates the value of catalogues in filling in biographical detail or work-list contents, or just providing the working dates and outlining the output of a number of composers whose names are not found even in dictionaries of the period, and in contemporary music journals, QMMR and The Harmonicon, or today in comprehensive dictionaries such as New Grove and MGG. The very existence of such catalogues indicates some “contemporary standing” of these now ‘forgotten’ composers such as E. S. Biggs, David Bruguier, John Gildon, Maria Hinckesman, Joseph de Pinna, George Eugene Griffin, Matthias von Holst, Frederick William Horncastle, George Kiallmark, Friedrich Joseph Kirmair, Francis Joseph Klose, William Thomas Ling, Edwin and John Merriott, Augustus Meves, Isaac Mott, Jean Mugnie, H. Piercy, John Purkis, John Watlen and Thomas Valentine.

In some cases, catalogues are our best documentation of the existence of these composers and their works. There is no mention of de Pinna, Hinckesman, Merriott, Mott, Mugnie, Piercy, Watlen and Valentine in Sainsbury’s dictionary. Horncastle is merely described as a tenor singer, with no mention of him as a composer; Gildon is given only a one-sentence summary which reads “an English professor of the piano, and composer of piano-forte and vocal music”; William Ling’s description as “a musician in London” is supplemented only by four publications, yet he published a catalogue containing 26 items. Two columns were given over to Meves, but only nine works by him are listed, three catalogues in five issues are extant today. An extraordinary account of life of Purkis is given in Sainsbury, but no work-list is provided. An extraordinary account of life of Purkis is given in Sainsbury, but no work-list is provided. Two columns were given over to Meves, but only nine works by him are listed.

In contrast, the entry for Kirmair is accompanied by an extensive list of works, which are acknowledged as foreign prints all imported by Boosey. There is no mention of Goulding and Royal Harmonic institution as his publisher, even though these two publishers issued catalogues devoted to his compositions (GG 9 and RH 3). Entries for Latour and Burrowes in Sainsbury are supplemented with fairly extensive work-lists. Latour’s work-list occupies four columns and includes over 200 publications; Burrowes’ is spread over three columns. Two-column entry for Klose lists some 30 publications with brief biography of the composer. However, in all cases, they are far less visually effective than the catalogues devoted to each composer where contents are organized by categories (genre-based or series titles) and the use of different-sized scripts, varied fonts and spacing, allows users to grasp the respective outputs at a glance even without perusing the contents line by line (see Illustration 1 and Catalogue Plate 5).

The treatment of Griffin makes for an interesting case study. Sainsbury’s nine-line entry introduces him as “an English professor of music and composer,” but lists only one work—an unidentifiable “A Quartet for two Violin, Tenor and Violoncello”.

Sixty years later, the first edition of Grove’s A Dictionary of Music and Musicians, provides a more extended work-list. However, a comparison of that with the two catalogues devoted to Griffin’s compositions still shows an incomplete knowledge of his output (see Illustration 2 and Catalogue Plates 5-6 and 5-7). The catalogues between them provide a full work-list (sometimes a variance with the information given in Grove 1) with detailed information as to dedicatees and performers of the listed publications. Here the value of the catalogues as being our best source of information, if only for a minor composer, becomes obvious.

IV. GENRE-ORIENTED CATALOGUES

With genre-oriented catalogues music publishers provided a further point of entry for knowledge of their output for those of the public less interested in specific composers or even a specific medium than in a specific repertoire. As an element in selling music, genre-based catalogues are, perhaps, the most specialised of all. They are dependent on music publishers’ offerings of instrumental music expanding to the extent that items of a specific genre (or closely related genres) warranted an individual catalogue, and they especially depend on a musical scene sufficiently diverse in its interests to appreciate, support or require such catalogues.

For vocal music, these conditions were present from the beginning of the period of this study. Nineteen catalogues, some in multiple states, appeared before 1800.\textsuperscript{108} We shall consider the early appearance and long-continuation of genre catalogues in the vocal field later.\textsuperscript{109}

As far as instrumental music is concerned, these conditions appeared only from the beginning of the nineteenth century. The genre catalogues for instrumental music emerging after 1810 are an important record, especially when put alongside the simultaneous appearance of single-composer (instrumental) catalogues,\textsuperscript{110} of a significant shift in the London musical scene from a predominately vocal basis in the late eighteenth century to a strong predilection for instrumental music after the turn of the century (see Table 11).\textsuperscript{111}

However, the use of genre as a recognised category for the organisation of items within a catalogue (vocal and instrumental alike) goes back to the umbrella-type catalogues and remains quite consistently used in medium-based catalogues throughout this study. As shown earlier, ‘Symphonies and overtures,’ and ‘Sonatas and lessons,’ were frequently encountered categories in umbrella-type (see Table 2-a) or instrumental-medium catalogues (see Tables 3-a to 3-f).

\textsuperscript{108} Periodical Italian Songs (BIJ 10, BIJ 11, LHH 1, LHH 2, GG 3a, MT 1a and 1b); Catches, Glees, Canzonets and Canons (BIJ 3, LHH 3, BR 3, LiF 3); Songs, Duets, Cantatas, Catches, Canons, Canzonets, Elegies, Glees, Trios, and Odes (TS 6); French Songs (BIJ 15); Vauxhall Songs (BW 1, 2, 3, 4); Sacred vocal music (BIJ 17, LiF 1); Operas and Songs (LB 18). Five of the 19 catalogues were issued by Bland, and seven issued by other publishers (LHH 1, LHH 2, GG 3, LHH 3, BR 3, LiF 1, LiF 3) were reprints and continuation of Bland’s catalogues. That Bland can be credited with over 60% of genre-oriented catalogues issued in the late-eighteenth century again highlights his importance in the history of music catalogues produced by London music publishers.

\textsuperscript{110} See the single composer catalogue section.

\textsuperscript{111} It should not be forgotten that in the medium-oriented category of catalogues, catalogues of instrumental music outnumbered those of vocal music.
In short, the independent genre catalogues, like the composer-based catalogues, provide a further example of a sub-category being converted into a catalogue in its own right; such an occurrence being dependent on the conditions previously mentioned.

The first genre catalogue for instrumental music appears to have been Birchall’s catalogue of ‘Sonatas, Lessons, Overtures, Capriccios, Divertimentos, & c. for the Harpsichord or Piano Forte’ (BR 8). The defining feature which puts genre before medium lies in the title.

With the exception of Clementi’s catalogue, ‘Index shewing [sic] the subject of each [string] Duet, Trio, Quartett & Quintett,’ (CM 2), we find all subsequent instrumental genre-oriented catalogues were issued for the piano forte. That the popularity of the piano and the market it represented, played an overwhelming role in the appearance of a string of genre catalogues is indisputable. Significantly, these catalogues concentrated on a growing number of lightweight genres, aimed to appeal to amateur domestic performers. The solid “Sonatas, Lessons, Overtures … ” and the alternative keyboard instruments of Birchall’s catalogue were speedily out-dated.\(^{112}\)

As noted earlier, initially, it seems the explosion of new genres that involved the piano forte enticed publishers to issue single-medium catalogues which accommodated this diversity in a number of sub-categories. In 1810 Platts converted one such sub-category into a single-genre catalogue “Catalogue of Favorite Airs arranged as Rondos for the Piano Forte” (PIJ 8a). In the same year, sub-categories of single-medium catalogues comprising a mix of lightweight genres also were converted into an independent genre catalogue; Clementi brought three of the most popular genres together in his CM 3 ‘Rondos, Airs with Variations and Military Pieces’. The light-weight, easily-assimilated ‘air with variations’ and its closely allied genre, ‘rondos on popular tunes’ was the favoured combination in Rutter & McCarthy’s catalogue of 1822 ‘Selection of Rondos, Airs with Variations & c’ (RM 1).\(^{113}\)

They share the characteristic of the use of pre-existing tunes, most commonly derived from popular operas and folksongs, as their thematic material.

A second stream of genre catalogues can be observed from about 1815 in the accelerated production of those given over to popular dance music. These genre catalogues included items composed primarily to accompany dancing as well as compositions written in the style of popular dance-forms \(^{112}\) The absence of instrumental-genre catalogues for overtly concert genres, such as concertos and symphonies, again reminds us that the music publishing industry was largely catering for domestic amateur performers. Variations, together with other light keyboard repertoires were ‘traditionally’ private genres to be performed in a domestic setting.

\(^{113}\) This combination of the two popular genres was frequently listed as a category or a sub-category in medium-oriented catalogues, for examples, BA 1, BJ 3, BL M 1, BL M 2, CM 9, GW 1, GG 11, GJ 2, HoW 2a and 2b, MiC 2a and 2b, MiC 4a, 4b and 4c, PE 1, PI J 2a, 2b, and 2c, PJJ 8d, PJJ J 13, SK 2b, 2c, SK 3, WG 8, WoR 1, and WC 3. Rondos and air with variations also were the mainstay of other combination sub-categories in medium-oriented catalogues: ‘Fantasias and Rondos’ (BoT 7); ‘Divertimento, Rondos, and Airs with Variations’ (HA 2); ‘Rondos, Divertimentos, & c.’ (PZ 5), ‘Rondos, Airs and Dances’ (WC 4); ‘Rondos, Minuets, National Airs, with Variations, & c.’ (CD 1a, 1b, 1c, 1d). Both genres were also being singled out via some single-composer catalogues issued for Gelinek (CS3, CS 4, FH 2, BR 16), Beethoven (MT 15, BL M 1), Mazzinghi (GG 10) and Kirmair (GG 9 and RH 3). To widen the selection put before the public by amalgamating several composers’ outputs of such pieces within a genre catalogue was a commercially sound step.
for performance in domestic settings, and functionally independent from dancing. Some eight years after Goulding’s rather old-fashioned and isolated catalogue of ‘Select Collection of Elegant Country Dances’ of 1807 (GG8), one dance form in particular stood out. The quadrille was introduced to London at Almack’s Assembly Rooms in 1815 creating a vogue for itself almost overnight. This instant popularity resulted in a catalogue devoted to this dance form in the year of its introduction (FH 1a, ‘Paine of Almack’s Quadrilles’.) Judging from the number of catalogues issued in the following decades, the quadrille remained one of the most popular ballroom dance-forms of the period, co-existing with rather than being overshadowed by the waltz (as might have been thought). Combination dance-type genre catalogues appeared in 1821 with Power’s ‘Select Dances, Waltzes, Quadrilles, & c. for the Piano Forte or Harp’ (PoJ 6) and ‘New Quadrilles, Waltzes, Dances, & c. for the Piano Forte or Harp’ (PoJ 7). The latter reached its eighth state in 1823 (see Table 11). Subsequently, Boosey took this type of catalogue to its extreme, incorporating six dance genres in his 1829 Catalogue, ‘New Foreign Dances, viz. Quadrilles, Galoppes, Waltzes, Cotillons, Mazurkas, Polonoises [sic], etc.’ (BoT 6).

It is clear from all this that a single-genre catalogue in the strictest sense was something of a rarity. But even those catalogues in which two, perhaps three genres were combined could scarcely be described as truly multi-genre. Equally noticeable is the lack of catalogues for the more ‘serious’ genres such as sonatas and concertos. Although sonatas and concertos did not disappear from publishers’ catalogues, but remained as genre sub-categories in medium- and composer-oriented catalogues, it seems that the popularity of these genres was not a substantial enough for publishers to prepare independent catalogues. Such a situation reiterates the fact that the genre catalogue was highly market-driven and was extremely particularized with its contents subtly shifting to capture nuances within the popular music field.

V. Catalogues of Vocal Music

Catalogues solely devoted to vocal music are much less prominent than those given over to instrumental music. The dominance of instrumental music over vocal music during the years covered in this study is illustrated in Table 12. Statistics indicate that the ratio of the number of instrumental music catalogues to those of vocal music varied from 1.6: 1 (between 1830 and 1834) to 69.3: 0 (between 1810 and 1814). The decade between 1810 and 1819 in particular, shows the supreme dominance of instrumental music catalogues. However, taking these figures as evidence for the 115 Based on the number of catalogue issues, not the number of catalogues.

absence of vocal music during this period would be a misinterpretation, as vocal music appeared in umbrella-type catalogues issued during this period. Therefore the figures do not imply the dearth of vocal music, but correspond to the increasing popularity of instrumental music.

*not including composer or genre-oriented catalogues

While the catalogues of instrumental music are distinctly defined and organised by medium, for instance, ‘Catalogue of Piano music,’ or of ‘Flute Music’, many catalogues of vocal music are simply entitled, ‘Catalogue of Vocal Music’,116 or issued with slightly more specific titles such as ‘Italian Vocal Music,’117 ‘English Vocal Music,’118 or ‘Italian and French Vocal Music’.119 Some catalogues bear no titles,120 or were issued as ‘Music, published by … ’.121 Others have genre-related titles, for These suggest that music publishers conceived and marketed vocal music differently from instrumental music. Only one catalogue could be considered as strictly medium-oriented: ‘A Catalogue of the commencing Bars of a Selection of the most Popular Vocal Duets’ (GG26). Owing to this difference, the discussion of vocal music catalogues is divided into three classes: ‘non-classified,’124 ‘composer-oriented,’ and ‘genre-oriented’ types (see Table 12-a).

124 This category includes catalogues entitled simply ‘vocal music,’ or just ‘Music’ and catalogues issued without titles.
Although ‘voice’ could be considered as a medium in a broad sense, there is no equivalent to the many specific ‘medium’ of performance as in instrumental music.\textsuperscript{125} 71.8% (328 of 457 issues, see Table 3) of instrumental music catalogues were primarily medium-oriented, 20.1% (92 issues) were composer-oriented, and only 8.1% (37 issues) were genre-oriented, yielding a ratio of 8.9: 2.5: 1. (See Table 2.) The ratios of the three type of catalogues of vocal music show a radical departure from that of instrumental music catalogues, and the proportion between the three classes considered – non-specified (94 issues), composer-oriented (68 issues), and genre oriented (85 issues) – is a more evenly distributed 1.4 : 1: 1.3.

\textsuperscript{125} This will be apparent by referring to the single-medium categories of instrumental music.
As shown in the earlier analysis of category headings listed in the umbrella-type and instrumental music catalogues, categories in vocal music catalogues (Table 12-b) reveal the make-up of vocal music repertoires.

‘Songs’, the most frequently listed category, embraces various genres – songs from operas, music in the theatre and London pleasure gardens, and music written for various combination of voice types. Dale’s catalogue ‘Dale’s Collection of all the favorite English Songs’ (DJ 12a, c. 1800) illustrates the make-up of this category (see Catalogue Plate 5-8). It contains excerpts from operas, Vauxhall songs, selections from Handel’s oratorios and theatre music.

Unremarkably, English songs were issued in substantial numbers and occupied a considerable proportion of many music publishers’ catalogues and these catalogues highlighting the principal output of English composers and their major contribution to the music of the period of this study. It was in the theatres, Drury Lane and Covent Garden, which were licensed to present spoken drama with music (including melodrama, farce, burletta, English opera and ballet) that native talent and English songs and operas were fostered. London Pleasure Gardens notably Marylebone (c. 1659-1778), Ranelagh (1742-1803), and Vauxhall Gardens (1661-1859) have been esteemed as ‘the nurseries of English songs’.127 These Gardens were popular venues which offered music (both instrumental and vocal)128 and other forms of entertainment to the public. Marylebone Gardens closed in 1778, and Ranelagh Gardens in 1803, while Vauxhall Gardens survived into the Victorian era.129

126 It should be noted that there is a gap between 1811 and 1814 across all categories, which corresponds to the period of the Napoleonic wars.

128 Symphonies, overtures, concertos, as well as typical Vauxhall songs were performed there.

An analysis of category-headings reveals a largely non-medium based organisation of contents within the catalogues of vocal music. Only four categories, ‘vocal duets’ (category 2), ‘English duets’ (category 24), ‘trios’ (category 10) and ‘quartets’ (category 22) are considered to be medium-based. ‘Songs with guitar accompaniments’ (category 18) also specify medium (voice and guitar), but it is more a ‘genre’-oriented (‘songs’) category than a medium.

Bland’s catalogue ‘Catches, Glees, Canzonetts, Canons. & c;’ (BIJ 3) is the only catalogue exclusively devoted to these genres. In other vocal music catalogues, they were frequently promoted as a group, listed under a combined category-heading such as ‘Glees, Canons & Madrigals’ or ‘Catches, Glees, & c.’. They share common social and musical characteristics. Musically, all can be characterised as harmonised songs for vocal ensemble. They are closely related genres; and their development was linked to or coincided with one another. The glee could be considered as an extension of the madrigal and inherited certain of its characteristics. The canzonet was a less elaborate form of the madrigal; the catch, a part-song built on the canonic principle, was characterised by its lively and sometimes obscene contents.

Both glees and catches are genres indigenous to England, and they came into being alongside each other. That the terms ‘catches’ and ‘glees’ were used interchangeably during the 1760s, suggests close affinity between the two genres. Numerous English composers made contributions to the repertoire. Just to name a few prolific composers of these genres who belong to the period of this study, we have Henry Bishop (1786-1855), John Danby (1757-1798), Samuel Webbe senior (1740-1816), William Knivyett (1779-1856), R. J. S. Stevens (1757-1837), Samuel Harrison (1760-1812), William Callcott (1766-1821), William Hawes (1785-1846), William Horsley (1774-1858) and Samuel Sebastian Wesley (1766-1837).

130 The catalogue was subsequently reprinted by a number of publishers, Lewis, Houston and Hyde, Linley, and Birchall.
133 Danby’s are listed in several publishers’ vocal music catalogues: BIJ 3b to 3d, BIJ 6, BIJ 9c (Page 3.) to 9h (Page 3.), DJ 14, HW 4, LiF 3, PrJ 18 and WW 7.

The madrigal may not be considered an indigenous English music genre, but neo-Renaissance English madrigals composed by late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century British composers such as Robert Lucas Pearsall (1795-1856), Samuel Wesley (1766-1837) and William Hawes (1785-1846), represent the lasting madrigal tradition in England. Perhaps more importantly, English composers and performers were ahead of their continental counterparts, as the interest in ancient music is said to have begun in eighteenth-century England. ‘Madrigals’ as a category within vocal music catalogues first appeared in the fifth state of Bland’s third catalogue (BIJ 3e, c. 1795). Apart from the subsequent re-appearances of the same catalogue under several publishers’ imprint (Birchall, Lewis, Houston & Hyde, Linley, c. 1796-97), the madrigal only re-emerges from about 1820 as a category in the catalogue devoted to vocal music by William Hawes (RH 2), issued by the Royal Harmonic Institution. This late appearance corresponds with the late flourishing of this genre.

The social settings in which these genres were cultivated also have much in common. They flourished in the gentlemen’s clubs (or ‘society’) as social entertainment. These clubs met regularly in taverns and inns, and as reflected in the nature of the gathering place and membership, at least in the beginning, catches and glee were typically sung by an all-male company. However, judging from the publications listed in London music publishers’ genre-oriented and general vocal music catalogues, by the last quarter of the eighteenth century ladies were not excluded from singing glee and catches. Bland, for instance offered at least 48 numbers for ladies as ‘Bland’s Collection of Ladies Catches, and Glee’ (BIJ 9h (Page 3.)). These were probably intended for domestic music-making rather than to be sung in taverns and inns, but nevertheless suggest that there was increasing interest in these genres.

The founding of the Madrigal Society in 1741, the Noblemen’s and Gentlemen’s Catch Club (1761), the Anacreontic Society (1766), Concert of Ancient Music (1776), [London] Glee Club (1783), the Concentores Sodales (1798) were influential in maintaining interest in the madrigal and glee. More importantly these organizations not only promoted the revival of ‘old music,’ but encouraged new repertoire, offering prizes for composition competitions, and performing new works of contemporary 134 Pearsall was a founding member of Bristol Madrigal Society (1837).

136 For further discussion on the dispersal of Bland’s music and catalogue plates see Chapter 4, p.152-56.
137 William Hawes was a conductor and honorary member of the Madrigal Society. Sainsbury, A Dictionary of Musicians, p. 338.
The proliferation of glee clubs from the 1780s which attracted many amateur gentlemen and professional singers fostered the popularity of this vocal genre so creating a valuable market.

Above all, glee appears to have been the most popular (third most frequently listed among all vocal categories), and continued to be cultivated throughout the period of this study (category 3 in Tables 12b and 12c). Despite its enormous popularity and copious repertoire, the glee was rarely a category in its own right in London music publishers’ catalogues. The number of catalogue issues which included the glee as a part of a composite category, for instance, ‘Catches, Glee, & c.’, ‘Catches, Gles, Madrigals, & c.’, ‘Catches, Glee and Duetts’ or ‘Songs and glee’, seem to have increased in the 1820s as glee became widely performed in public concerts, notably at ‘Harrison and Knyvett’s Vocal Concert,’ and at the ‘Professional Concert’.

While the glee and the madrigal (categories 3 and 12 in Tables 12b and 12c) remained in music publishers’ catalogues and flourished throughout the nineteenth century, interest in the catch (category 9 in Tables 12b and 12c) seems to have dwindled by the first decade of the nineteenth century. The last vocal music catalogue to list ‘catches’ was Monzani’s ‘A Catalogue of Vocal Italian Music’ (MT 5) issued in 1806 which despite its title had a category, ‘Periodical English Songs, Duets, Catches, Glee, & c.’ The catch had been promoted primarily by Bland in 1780s (BJ 3a to 3e) and Dale (DJ 5 and 6) in the 1790s; despite the ameliorating attempt of the contents of Bland’s ‘Ladies Collection of Catches, Glee, Canzonets and Madrigals, & c.’ only three publishers touched it after 1800. Here, catalogues seem to record even moral changes in society, with the catch falling victim to its own often obscene humour.

V. VOCAL MUSIC – I) CATEGORIES –D) OPERAS – ENGLISH, ITALIAN, AND FRENCH – CATEGORIES 5 AND 7

English, Italian and some French operas coexisted in London’s musical life, but in their separate performance venues. The King’s Theatre in the Haymarket and the Pantheon presented foreign operas in foreign languages, catered for and privately subsidized by the aristocracy. English operas at 140 The Catch Club [London] instituted annual prizes for three categories, catches, canons and glee, from 1763. In 1811, the Madrigal Society is known to have offered a prize for the best madrigal submitted. Johnson, “The 18th-century Glee”: 200

142 Only a handful of catalogues have categories solely designated for the glee: BLM 2, BR 12, CI 1, CS 5 and GG 24, GG44.
Drury Lane, Covent Garden and the Little Theatre drew a wider London public. The King’s Theatre engaged mostly foreign composers and performers, while Drury Lane and Covent Garden were dominated by English composers such as Storace, Bishop, Charles Dibdin (1745-1814), Mazzinghi, Attwood, T. Cooke, William Reeve (1757-1815), William Shield (1748-1829) and Michael Kelly (1762-1826).

The opera in vocal music catalogues are organized in several ways. In Dale’s multi-genre vocal music catalogues DJ 5 and DJ 6, they appear under a genre-category ‘English Operas & Songs’ (DJ 5) or ‘Operas, & c. (DJ 6), which list selection of single numbers from operas as well as scores. Bland also treated this genre in the same manner, listing full score and selections from operas under the category ‘Operas’ (BJ 9 (Page 3.)) within multi-genre catalogues; RH 12 and JW 1, too, list operas in score and selections under a category entitled ‘operas’.

In Bland and Weller’s multi-genre catalogue BW 6, we find both genre-oriented (‘operas’) and ‘work-specific’ categories. In the latter, an individual opera becomes a category, as in ‘songs from the opera of ...’. Chappell’s multi-genre catalogue CS 9 contains four (of the 17) such work-specific ‘opera’ categories: ‘Songs in Auber’s Opera of The National Guitar or, Bride and no Bride’, ‘Songs, & c. in the Rossini’s Opera of The Maid of Judah’, ‘Songs, & c. in Auber’s Opera of Masaniello’ and ‘Songs, & c. in J. A. Wade’s Opera of Two Houses of Grenada.’ Under these categories, selections from each opera are listed.\(^{145}\)

More specialised types of opera catalogues include a handful each devoted to a single opera: CS 14 (Auber’s The Maid of Cashmere or La Bayadère, CS 16 (Roberto il Diavolo by Meyerbeer), and GG 39 (Gustavus the Third, by Auber). Two catalogues, Dale’s DJ 8 (Storace) and Monzani’s MT 9 (Mozart) are among the few examples of single-composer opera catalogues covering more than one opera. With this genre, publishers appear to have favoured a ‘work-specific’ approach.

Although there had been a pervasive foreign influence in the production of operas in London, the frequency with which the category ‘English operas’ within multi-genre vocal music catalogues and the number of single-genre catalogues issued for English operas (LB 18, GG 6, FJ 6, FJ 7, CS 18, GG 41 and GG 42) attest to their popularity in London’s music scene and in domestic music-making.

\(^{145}\) The first three are English adaptations by Lacy. English adaptations of continental operas were also performed at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, and were published in London. The extent of authentic materials in these adaptations varied greatly as adaptors freely rearranged and inserted music additional to the original production.
While oratorios (entire and in ‘selection from’ format) were performed at theatres (Drury Lane, Covent Garden, and the King’s Theatre) in Lent, at provincial festivals and in concerts, other sacred vocal music such as services, anthems and hymns served liturgical purposes.

There is considerable overlap between the composers of glees, catches and madrigals and of sacred music. Many glee composers were also organists or church choirmen, and composed sacred music alongside their secular output. As with these smaller secular genres, the anthem is another where we find a dominance of English composers over foreign composers. Contributions of native composers such as Samuel Wesley, John Wall Callcott (1766-1821), John Clarke-Whitfield (1770-1836), Thomas Attwood (1765-1838), William Crotch (1775-1847) and James Kent (1700-1776) appear alongside Haydn, Handel and Beethoven.

Bland and Dale dominate this area in the late-eighteenth century; ‘Bland’s Collection of Divine Music’ was continued by Linley and Birchall. The neglect of this area by music publishers between 1808 and 1823 may well reflect the lack of any sizeable market and be a commentary on the merit of the music being written and on the standard of performance of church music during the period.

Performance of music in English cathedrals – and they were the most likely purchasers of liturgical music and anthems – was at its lowest. Neither composers nor publishers would be stimulated to produce any repertoire. Only with a move towards the reform of music in cathedral and parish churches in the 1830s, as the so-called Oxford movement gained momentum, does this category return to the catalogues. From 1800 to 1825, only five catalogues listed sacred music as a category, furthermore, sacred music formed only a small proportion of these catalogues: MiC 1 (3 of the 31 items), MT 5 (5 of 490 items) and HoW 1 (21 of 196 items). Only Clementi’s catalogue CM 11 of 1824 is devoted to sacred vocal music. In contrast, between 1826 and 1837, nine catalogues included sacred music as a category. In most cases, sacred vocal music including anthems, hymns and oratorios are listed in non-genre specific categories, most commonly entitled ‘sacred music’ or ‘divine music’. Only in a few catalogues is sacred vocal music organized under genre-related categories:

147 Linley reprinted Bland’s ‘Catalogue Subjects or Beginnings of Bland’s Col® Divine Music’; Birchall retained the collection in his umbrella-type catalogue BR 4.
'sacred songs' (PoJ 10, c. 1823), ‘Dr. Watt’s Divine Songs’ (CI 1a to 1c, c. 1798-99), and ‘Oratorios’ (CM 20, c. 1828).

Interest in national airs from the early decades of the nineteenth century can be gleaned from the number of publications listed in the catalogues which make references to Scottish (or Caledonian), Welsh and Irish (or Hibernian) airs. They were not only published as vocal numbers, but also appeared in numerous instrumental arrangements, being introduced as a theme (‘air’) for variations and rondos, and often were incorporated into larger scale and more serious genres such as sonatas, symphonies and concertos.

Temperley attributes the popularity of national airs in the nineteenth century to the idiosyncratic ‘strangeness’ and ‘crudity’ of folk-music which appealed to Romantic sentiment for ‘sublime’ music. The simple and unsophisticated sentiment of folk-songs was the ideal antithesis of the overtly bravura style of Italian operas. The emergence of the national airs as a popular vocal genre coincides with the rise of interest in nationalism. In England, from the 1800s, a period of intense popularity of national airs from the British Isles, may have had overtones of ‘Romanticism’ but may have been more directly inspired by strong national sentiment aroused by the Napoleonic wars. Not surprisingly, less emphasis is placed on Italian or French vocal music in London music publishers’ catalogues.

In vocal music, national airs emerge as distinctive categories in catalogues issued from the 1810s. ‘Irish, Welsh and Scottish melodies harmonized by Beethoven and Haydn,’ which appeared in the catalogues issued by Thomas Preston (PrJ 12, 15, 18 and 20), mark such fashion. The collection was instigated by George Thomson (1757-1851) of Edinburgh in 1793 but eventually was published jointly by Preston and Thomson. Composers solicited to provide accompaniments to Thomson and Preston’s collection were all foreigners, Pleyel, Kozeluch, Haydn, Beethoven, Hummel and Weber.

James Power responded to Thomson and Preston’s collections with his own A Selection of Irish Melodies, with Symphonies and Accompaniments by Sir J. Stevenson, and characteristic words by T. Moore (in PoJ 2, PoJ 3 and PoJ 10). Ten numbers and a Supplement, comprising one hundred and twenty-four songs were issued between 1808 and 1834. Power’s A Selection of National Airs included in the later issues of PoJ 2 (2h to 2k) and PoJ 10 and PoJ 11 (11a to 11c) appeared in six numbers from 1818 and 1828. Two volumes of A Selection of Welsh Melodies with Symphonies and Accompaniments, by John Parry, and characteristic words by Mrs. Hemans were issued by Power in 1821 and 1822. That the Power’s collection of Irish Melodies continued to ten numbers over nearly twenty years, and National Airs to six numbers in ten years, suggests they struck a responsive chord and achieved enduring popularity.

The vogue for national airs was not confined to Scottish, Welsh and Irish airs. From the 1820s interest broadened to include the exotic: Indian melodies and Hebrew melodies. ‘A Selection of Indian Melodies’ is listed within ‘New Vocal Music’ (PoJ 3, c. 1820) and ‘A Catalogue of Vocal Music (PoJ 10, c.1823). J. Green’s ‘A Catalogue of Music. Composed by I. Nathan’ (GJ 1) lists ‘Hebrew Melodies’ (arranged by Nathan) as a category; George & Manby’s single-genre catalogue is titled ‘Celebrated Hebrew Melodies’ (GM 1, c. 1828); and Wybrow’s catalogue ‘Select Catalogue of New Vocal Music’ (WW 4, c. 1837) contains two categories, ‘Hebrew Melodies, of Great Interest’ and ‘Hebrew Melodies Harmonized’.

European folk music appears in the late 1820s: ‘Swiss Melodies’ as a category in Mori & Lavenu’s ‘New Vocal Music’ (ML 1, c. 1827); ‘Bohemian Popular Airs’ in Preston’s ‘A Catalogue of New Music (PrJ 23, c. 1828); and ‘Tyrolese melodies’ appears multi-genre vocal music catalogues from about 1827.

Tyrolese melodies were immensely popular in the 1830s. The vogue for Tyrolese songs swept the continent, England and later, America, thanks to the appearance of ‘singing families,’ or ‘singing troupes’ – usually mixed-vocal ensembles. The Rainers were one of the best-known troupes singing ballads, and sentimental and humorous songs, and yodelling in Tyrolese style. They arrived in London in May 1827, and toured through Great Britain. Willis & Co. published ‘The Tyrolese Melodies, as Sung by the Rainer Family, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, with the Original Words, and an English Translation, by W. Ball. Esq. adapted for one or four voices, with an accompaniment for the Piano Forte, by Ignaz Moscheles,’ soon after their arrival.

Collections of Tyrolese melodies sung by the Rainers are found as a category, ‘The Tyrolese Airs, Sung by the Rainer Family’ in most catalogues Willis & Co. issued from the later part of 1827 and 150 Nos. I to III were entered at Stationers’ Hall 7 September 1815; No. VII on 14 October 1818; No. VIII on 15 May 1821; No. IX on 1 November 1824; No. X on 28 June 1834. First number was published in 1808 in Dublin by James Power.

well into the first half of the 1830s (see Catalogue Plate 5-9). The enthusiasm for ‘Tyrolese’ and ‘Swiss’ songs also saw them taken up by some of the most eminent singers of the day. These arrangements are listed in vocal music catalogues of other publishers under category headings such as ‘Madame Malibran’s Popular Tyroliennes’ (CS 9, 15 and 18), ‘The Swiss Airs Sung by Madame Stockhausen’ (LF 4, CS 9, CS 15, CS 17 and CS 18), and ‘Swiss Melodies’ (ML 1). Once again, music publishers’ catalogues capture and chronicle accurately a short-lived craze within the fabric of musical life and confirm their value in preserving the total picture of all musical activity and fashion.

A quite marked language-based ordering of some, or even all, of the contents of a large number of vocal music catalogues reflects publishers’ concern for different groups of clientele. Most often these categories are titled simply as ‘Vocal Italian’ ‘Vocal French’ or ‘German Songs’ or ‘German Songs, adapted to English words’. In some instances these language-based categories became independent catalogues.

The Italian and French languages were the domain of the cultured upper class; vocal music with English texts was enjoyed by a wider public. In this way, the language of the text provided a convenient means to separate out music intended for different classes of consumers and their assumed associated tastes and abilities. As shown in Table 12-b, Italian vocal music was more widely cultivated than French vocal music, while German-text vocal music had no place in the British music market until the late 1830s or the early 1840s.

The strong preference for Italian vocal music and the acceptance of Italian-language texts is reflected throughout the period of this study in the diverse catalogues that in some way incorporated this repertoire. In the late eighteenth century, such was the demand of Italian vocal music; catalogues were devoted entirely to this valuable market. Bland early issued two catalogues of Italian vocal music, one thematic ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Italian Songs & c.’ (BIJ 10, c. 1790-91, and one title ‘Periodical Italian Songs’ (BIJ 11, c. 1790). These were reprinted and continued by Lewis, Houston & Hyde (LHH 1 and LHH 2, c. 1795 and 1796) and Goulding (GG 3, c. 1798-1803. Monzani issued two catalogues; ‘A Collection of Periodical Italian Songs, Duets, Trios, & c.’ (MT 1) appeared in nine states from 1799 to 1802, and ‘Vocal Italian Music’ (MT 5, c. 1806). Kelly brought out a catalogue at much the same time (KM 2, c. 1806).

Only with the return of vocal categories to any prominence in 1824 do catalogues of Italian vocal music reappear. Falkner (FH 7, c. 1824), Chappell (CS 17a to 17c, 1833-34), George & Manby (GM 4, c. 1840) each issued a catalogue. ‘Italian vocal music’ appeared as a category within the general vocal catalogues issued by other music publishers (DJ 5, DJ 6, BW 6, RH 12, MI 1, WI 3f to 3i, RH 13, JW 1, DuJ 1, AW 1 and RH 15)

The lesser popularity of French vocal music in England in the late eighteenth century is demonstrated by the lack of catalogues devoted to this repertoire. In contrast to the numerous catalogues of Italian music, only one, Bland’s ‘Thematic Catalogue of French Songs’ (BJ 15, c. 1793), appeared before 1800, and was not continued by any of his successors. The English response to the French revolution seems clearly reflected here. Even the category “Vocal French” disappears from multi-genre vocal catalogues after 1795. After 1800 the Napoleonic War undoubtedly maintained the absence of this category from London music publishers’ catalogues. Hostility towards the French may have influenced the musical taste of the English market, performance of vocal music with French texts would be seen as anti-patriotic. French vocal music trickles back much later than Italian music. Chappell’s ‘New Italian and French Vocal Music’ (CS 17, c. 1833-34) and George & Manby’s ‘Select French Songs’ (GM 2, c. 1840) are the only catalogues of French vocal music. As a category, French vocal music returns to only four multi-genre vocal catalogues.

Chappell’s catalogue ‘New English Vocal Music’ (CS 19, c. 1837) contains the category ‘Classical German Songs,’ but they have been given English texts; effectively, only one catalogue issued by Johanning & Whatmore, ‘New Vocal Music’ includes German vocal music (with German texts) as a category (JW 1, c.1831).

Willis’ multi-genre vocal music catalogue (WI 9a) represents a typical variety of vocal music put before public in the late 1820s. There is a pronounced emphasis on solo vocal items (all by English composers); the renewed interest in glees is well-represented, as is the current fad for Tyrolese airs. Italian-language songs have returned, but no French language repertoire. Sacred music has a small role – two titles are given, but the fashionable guitar/voice genre is strongly present (see Catalogue Plate 5-9).
Excerpts from operas are marked in red; songs are marked in green; Vauxhall songs are marked in black; selections from Handel’s oratorios are marked in blue.
Catalogue Plate 5-9, W1 9a (c. 1829)
The most significant feature of composer-oriented vocal music catalogues is the prominence of English composers, in stark contrast to composer-oriented instrumental music catalogues which are dominated by foreign composers. With the exception of Mozart and Rossini, the rest (19 of 21) are given over to works by English composers.

Monzani’s Mozart catalogue consists of selections from the composer’s Italian Operas: La Clemenza di Tito, Così Fan Tutte, Il Flauto Magico, Il Don Giovanni, Idomeneo and Le Nozze di Figaro. The catalogue is dated c. 1810. With the exception of La Clemenza di Tito, which was performed at the...
King’s Theatre in 1806, the catalogue predates the London performances of the other operas. Così Fan Tutte had its London première in 1811, Il Flauto Magico in 1816, Il Don Giovanni in 1817, and Le Nozze di Figaro in 1816. During the 1817 season, Mozart’s operas (Don Giovanni, Figaro, Così, Flauto Magico, and Tito) were performed 64 times (a combined total) making up 67% of performances staged at the King’s Theatre; in the following season, they were performed 62 times (56% of all productions); and in the 1819 season, there were 69 performances (46%).

Although principal flautist at the King’s Theatre, it is significant that Monzani issued a catalogue devoted to Mozart’s operas well in advance of their London premières. However, there is evidence that Mozart’s operas did appear in London concerts as individual numbers in the 1790s and 1800s at the King’s Theatre and various benefit concerts. Perhaps on the basis of this acquaintance he brought out his first catalogue ‘A Collection of Periodical Italian Songs, Duets, & c.’ (MT 1) which ran to nine states between 1799 and 1802, included a large quantity of arias from Mozart’s operas.

Rossini, perhaps the most dominant operatic composer of the post-Napoleonic era, only attracted one publisher to issue a single-composer catalogue. Falkner’s catalogue, ‘New Music composed by Rossini’ (FH 3) also consists entirely of single numbers from operas, including Tancredi, L’Italiana in Algeri, La gazza ladra, Mosè in Egitto, La pietra del paragone, La cenerentola, Torvaldo e Doriska, Guillaume Tell, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, Il Turco in Italia, Demetrio e Polibio and Otello. Rossini appeared on the London music scene when the popularity of Mozart’s operas was at its height. Il Barbiere di Siviglia was first performed in London during the 1818 season and La Gazza Ladra (London première, the King’s Theatre, March 1821), La Donna del Lago (London première, February 1823), Otello and Guillaume Tell are found in many publishers’ catalogues as single vocal numbers as well as in various instrumental arrangements.

The only single-composer catalogue devoted to English opera is Dale’s ‘A Catalogue of the Favorite Operas … Composed and Selected by Stephen Storace’ (DJ 8, see Catalogue Plate 2-21). Storace is considered as one of the most successful composers of English theatre music in the eighteenth century. Although a director at the King’s Theatre in 1787 where his La cameriera astuta was performed in 1788, his fame rests on a series of operas and afterpieces written for the Drury Lane theatre from October 1788 until his death in 1796. Dale’s catalogue contained all five of Storace’s full-length English operas (The Haunted Tower, The Siege of Belgrade, The Pirates, The Cherokee, The Iron Chest, Mahmoud) and afterpieces, No Song, No Supper, The Doctor and the Apothecary, The Prize, My Grandmother, Lodoiska, The Glorious First of June, and The Three and the Deuce. With all its states this catalogue provides a work-list for the composer. Typically, Dale offered each opera in score and as a selection of separate numbers; each opera becomes a separate category within the catalogue. Adaptations of some operas for the flute and for the guitar were also offered, Dale appearing to cover every means to attract purchasers.

The catalogue devoted to the works of Callcott (CI 1) was issued by the composer, and the contents of his catalogue reflect the genres in which the composer was prolific, mostly glee{s and a number of anthems. Callcott is known to have commenced his career as a glee composer; at the age of 19, his compositions won three of the four prizes given by the Catch Club in 1785. He was a founding member of the Glee Club (1787).

R. J. S. Stevens of ‘Charter-House’ was a well-known composer of glee{s. The catalogue was issued by the composers (Stevens and John Percy) and contains his prize winning glee, It was a Lover and his Lass (1786) and his other famous glee{s notably Ye Spotted Snakes, Sigh No More, Ladies, and Fairy Glee from Oberon, Strike the Harp in Praise of Bragel and Crabbed Age and Youth. The last two states of the catalogue (PS 1d and 1e) also contain Selections of Sacred Vocal Music for one two three and four Voices, edited by Stevens.

The Catalogue of works of William Hawes, issued by the Royal Harmonic Institution during the first of half of the 1820s, containing his glee{s, madrigals, and harmonised songs also sums up the repertoires favoured by English composers.

158 Jane Girdham. Appendix 2 to English Opera in Late Eighteenth-century London. Stephen Storace at Drury Lane (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1997), p. 228-234. The Doctor and the Apothecary (25 October 1788, Drury Lane); The Haunted Tower (24 November 1789, Drury Lane); No Song, No Supper (16 April 1790, Drury Lane); The Siege of Belgrade (1 January 1791, Drury Lane); The Pirates (24 November 1792, Drury Lane); The Prize (11 March 1793, Drury Lane); My Grandmother (16 December 1793, Little Theatre); Lodoiska (9 June 1794, Drury Lane); The Glorious First of June (2 July 1794, Drury Lane); The Cherokee (20 December 1794, Drury Lane); The Three and the Deuce (2 September, Little Theatre); The Iron Chest (12 March 1796, Drury Lane); Mahmoud (30 April 1796, Drury Lane).

159 The only dramatic works not listed are: The Cave of Trophonius (afterpiece), Poor Old Drury (prelude with music) and Dido, Queen of Carthage (full-length, serious opera). The last work was produced at the King’s Theatre in May 1792, but ran for only five performances. This may explain its absence from Dale’s catalogue. See Fiske, ‘The Operas of Stephen Storace,” 41. Dale’s catalogue also list minor works in a brief category ‘Miscellaneous Articles by Storace’.

160 “Memoirs of Dr. Callcott,” The Harmonicon 19, no. 3 (March 1831): 54. The Prize winning entries were O Sovereign of the Willing Soul, On a Summer’s Morning (Catch), and Bow down thine Ear (Canon).

161 “Memoirs of Dr. Callcott,” 54.

Bland & Weller’s single composer catalogue of John Parry contains Vauxhall songs and excerpts from the composer’s English operas. Parry was a conductor at Vauxhall Gardens from 1809, and his Vauxhall songs may have been originally composed specifically for the performance at the Gardens. The two genres presented in the catalogue again underline the areas in which English composers were well-received.

V. VOCAL MUSIC CATALOGUES – III) GENRE-ORIENTED CATALOGUES (VG*)

Some eighteen genres are represented in 59 genre-oriented catalogues (see Table 14). Some genres such as English operas, songs, French songs, Italian songs and Vauxhall songs were singled out and promoted by single-genre catalogues. ‘Italian songs’ was the most popular single genre running to ten catalogues in 23 states. As noted in the analysis of vocal category-headings, the related genres of glees, canzonets, catches, canons and madrigals usually appeared together in multi-genre catalogues. Glees featured in the titles of 13 of the 59 catalogues.

A sequence of single-genre catalogues are four “Vauxhall Songs” catalogues issued annually by Bland & Weller between 1794 and 1797 (BW 1, 2, 3 and 4). They were invariably titled ‘The Following Songs sung this Season at Vauxhall-Gardens.’ No composers were named, but the contents of the catalogues reveal that these four are single-composer catalogues of the music of James Hook (1746-1827), director, official organist and composer to the Gardens. As the Gardens were open between May and August, the catalogues would have appeared in the autumn of each year, reminders of the fleeting immediacy of the songs.

No succeeding single-genre catalogues of Vauxhall songs issued by Bland & Weller have been located, however the publishers continued to include them in their other vocal catalogue BW 6 and their single-composer catalogue BW 8. No other publishers active in the nineteenth century issued a catalogue devoted to the songs written for and performed at Vauxhall, or at any other Gardens. This may be an indication that the heyday of the Pleasure Gardens was the eighteenth century.

165 H. C. Colles, “English Songs of One Hundred Years ago,” The Musical Times 53, no. 830 (April 1912): 243; Croft-Murray and McVeigh, ‘London (i), V, 3: Musical life, 1660-1800: Pleasure gardens,’ 125. The decline of the London Pleasure Gardens in the nineteenth century is said to have brought upon by the proliferation of clubs in many parts of the town, which would have provided alternative entertainment outlets.

V. VOCAL MUSIC CATALOGUES – IV) SUMMARY
One of the most defining characteristics of the catalogues of vocal music is that they outline the development and achievement of English composers. Certainly Handel, Mozart, Rossini, Auber, Weber appear, but together with composers such as Arne, Arnold, Attwood, Boyce, Hook, Storace, Stevens, J. Stevenson, Attwood. The prevalence of “the foreign” is not as obvious in the field of vocal music as in instrumental music. It is only in the catalogues of vocal music that we find unique and large repertoires concentrated on a number of indigenous genres by native composers. English composers were much appreciated and popular during their time, not least because the texts they set were in the vernacular, and they catered to the growing musical appetite of amateur performers for domestic music-making of the vocal kind which undoubtedly was aided by amateur/professional institutions, such as glee clubs and madrigal societies, as well as English-oriented institutions such as pleasure gardens and some of the London theatres. In this sense, vocal music provided a ground on which native composers were encouraged and supported, and the catalogues of vocal music provide an admirable starting point to gain a comprehensive overview of the situation – music titles and composers alike.

It is worth re-emphasising the strong contrast in the presentation of repertoire between catalogues of vocal music and instrumental music; in the former we see a more genre-oriented approach; in the latter, a much more pronounced medium-oriented marketing, and consequently a far larger number of catalogues.
While most catalogues readily fall into one of the three types (medium, genre and composer) considered in this chapter, there are catalogues which focus on more than one catalogue type. The shaded categories in the following table represent the type under which the catalogues had been classified, other equally relevant type(s) are indicated by ‘•’. Catalogues FH 2, BR 16, CS 3 and CM 4 are single composer, single genre and single medium catalogues, devoted to Josef Gelinek’s airs with variations for the piano forte. This is a case of popular composer, popular medium, and popular genre, where each of the three elements could have been considered equally valid in the marketing of the works contained in the catalogues. All of these catalogues have been classified as single-composer catalogues, the deciding factor being the order of the two elements in the titles, ‘Gelinek’ and ‘Airs with Variations’.

Likewise, Hodsoll’s catalogues HoW 3, HoW 6 and HoW 7, exhibit more than one commercially important aspect. The catalogues were devoted to a popular chamber scoring (piano forte, with ad lib. accompaniments for the flute, violin and violoncello) and genre (operatic overtures and symphonies), written by the popular foreign composers of the day, including Mozart, Beethoven, Haydn, Pleyel, Weber, Rossini, Mehul, Winter, Boieldieu and Päer, all arranged by Stephen Francis Rimbault (1773-1837). Here the choices were between single-medium, multi-genre, or multi-composer. These were classified as medium-oriented catalogues, as this unified the diverse genre and composer elements – and was, as well, the principal marketing ploy.

There is a possibility of subsidiary classification by social function which usually appeared as categories within catalogues of the three main types. The most notable one is sacred music, and extends to theatre music, and music performed at public gardens. A later development in this type of classification is the emphasis given to the pedagogical purpose of music, with contents divided by the technical difficulties (‘easy’, ‘medium’ and ‘difficult’) seen in the catalogues issued by R. Cocks and Co.\textsuperscript{166}

The period from 1780 to 1837 saw a considerable and dynamic transformation of the music publishing industry. The changes were brought about by the expansion of repertoires, proliferation of public concerts and increased demand for printed music. As we have witnessed, the catalogues mirror closely the changes in the make-up of the publishers’ intended markets and their sizes, performance practice, and more importantly changes in marketing techniques.

Throughout the nineteenth century, the middle-class had a profound influence on the structure of the music publishers’ market. Not only were they a new economic force but they were the most significant consumers of printed music. As far as music publishing is concerned, the nineteenth century was the era of middle-class and domestic music making. The quantity of chamber music, such as duets for the piano forte and harp, or piano and flute, or for piano forte, with accompaniments for violin, violoncello and flute listed in the publishers’ catalogues supports our assumption that the music publishing industry focused on supplying music for the domestic amateur performers.

The emphasis given to medium is due in part to the fact that musical instruments had more rigid gender and sociological implications than is the case in the present day. By offering catalogues organized by medium, publishers may have satisfactorily addressed the different markets to which they were appealing. This also explains the language-based distinctions in the catalogues of vocal music. As women became more and more at the centre of domestic music-making, it is not surprising to find publishers’ catalogues concentrating on the instruments which were generally associated with women, the piano forte, the harp and the guitar, and songs with accompaniment for the piano forte, or harp or guitar.

Frequent changes seen in the structure and focus of various types of catalogues are indicative of the chancy and precarious nature of music consumption and various facets of musical culture. They clearly demonstrate that the publishers continually adapted and modified the organizational structure of their catalogues to promote publications effectively.

Along with concert promoters and impresarios, music publishers played a central role in the musical life of their society by supplying and distributing printed music, which was the only means to recreate music at home. More significantly, the music publishing industry ensured a wider dissemination of music, beyond the composers’ immediate circle of aristocratic patrons, pupils and fellow musicians. That the music publishing industry catered for mass culture by the early nineteenth century is evident not only from the diversity and the quantity of printed music available, but also in the prominence given to music which was aimed chiefly at amateur domestic performers. As William Weber has recognized, the music publishing industry already had “the dynamics of mass culture from the start of the nineteenth century”.167

CHAPTER 6:

THEMATIC CATALOGUES IN LONDON MUSIC PUBLISHING 1780-1837

Thematic catalogues made up only a small proportion of all sale catalogues issued by London music publishers during this period. Some publishers had no recourse to this type of catalogue at all; others used it to varying degrees. This chapter traces the use of the thematic catalogue in the London music publishing scene from its introduction. In doing so, it draws attention to some important practical and financial aspects of the music publishing trade, first by examining the circulation and reuse among publishers of the plates from which catalogues were printed, and second, by attempting to explain why publishers came to reserve this format of catalogue for genres of music and the compositions of particular composers. In this last respect, a discussion of thematic catalogues seems an appropriate coda to the survey of catalogues undertaken in the previous chapter.

The essence of the thematic catalogue is the use of musical notation – the citation of the opening notes, or incipit. London music publishers variously called such catalogues ‘Theme index,’ ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings,’ ‘Theme Catalogue,’ ‘Catalogue Thematic,’ ‘Catalogue of 1 Thematic catalogues were not exclusive to music publishers in London, nor were they the first to use them. Their continental counterparts also issued thematic catalogues. Johann Gottlob Immanuel Breitkopf produced a thematic catalogue, Catalogo delle sinfonie, partite, overture, soli, duetti, trii, quattri e concerti per il violino, Flauto traverso, cembalo ed altri stromenti, che si trovano in manuscritto nella Officina musica di Giovanni Gottlob Breitkopf in Lipsia, in six parts and 16 supplements between 1761 and 1787; J. J. & B. Hummel’s Catalogue thématique ou Commencement de toutes les œuvres de musique, which comprised one principal volume and seven supplements appeared between 1768 and 1774; Christian Ulrich Ringmacher issued a Catalogo de’ Soli, Duetti, Trii, in 1773; Artaria in Vienna issued a Catalogue thématique, in 1798; and Imbault in Paris issued a Catalogue thématique, c. 1792.

2 Here, this is discussed only in relation to plates of thematic catalogues. See Chapter 2 for a more detailed account of the purchase and reuse of music and title catalogue plates in an analytical sense.
Commencing Bars’ and ‘Table Thematic’.³ Here, ‘theme’ or ‘thematic’ is synonymous with incipit which, of course, is not necessarily the true theme of the music. In this case, ‘Catalogue of Commencing Bars’ and ‘Catalogue of Beginnings’ are the most precise descriptions of the catalogues examined here. Nevertheless, since the eighteenth century, such ‘incipit’ catalogues have been commonly called ‘thematic catalogues’.⁴

Music publishers’ thematic catalogues present basic information for their intended customers. In most cases, each entry comprises an incipit (rarely more than three bars) on a single stave or a system, title, price, and the name of the composer. These catalogues serve as guides, which enable a positive identification of works through a quick glance at the incipit. In this way, they are more effective than a title catalogue, in which large numbers of titles appear in an abbreviated form that makes precise identification sometimes impossible.

I. INTRODUCTION OF THE THEMATIC CATALOGUE – WILLIAM FORSTER

John Corri, the son of Domenico Corri (1746-1825), working in Edinburgh is known to have issued a thematic catalogue, ‘A Select Collection of the most admired songs, duets, etc. from operas of the highest esteem, etc.,’ as early as 1779.⁵ In London, William Forster (1739-1808) appears to have been the first music publisher to issue a thematic catalogue. Barry Brook dates Forster’s ‘Catalogue of the works of Giuseppe Haydn’ (FW 2), which was printed within his publication of Haydn’s quartets, Op. 50 (Hob. III: 44-49), to “?1785”, and also to “?1786”.⁶ Anthony van Hoboken, however, dates the composition of the quartets to 1787, and assigns Forster’s edition of the quartets to that year.⁷ The copy of Forster’s catalogue seen by the author (see Catalogue Plate 6-1) is printed within his publication of Haydn’s Grand Overture no. 2, in D (Hob. I: 70), with the imprint on the catalogue: ‘Printed & Sold by Wm. Forster at his Music Warehouse, No. 348, next door to the Lyceum. Strand, London.’ The contents of this catalogue are identical with those cited by Brook in his Thematic Catalogues in Music: an Annotated Bibliography; both catalogues list ‘34 overtures, six quartets Op. 33 and six quartets Op. 44 (correctly Op. 50).’ The overtures are set out in several sequences: the first series is designated with the letters A to M, followed by prepared blank-staves for further expansion (labelled letters N to Z); then three overtures without letters; the next sequence is numbered 1 to 15; and finally the overtures Op. 15, nos. 1 to 3; the quartets follow at the end (see Catalogue Plate 6-1).

³ For example, there are Bland’s ‘Theme Catalogue of French Songs,’ ‘Index to 48 Nos. of Bland’s Harpsichord Collection without Accompaniments,’ ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of 2 Periodical Works for the Harpsichord or Piano Forte,’ ‘Index to Le tout Ensemble’ [&] ‘Index to the Duets [sic]’; Clementi & Co’s ‘Table Thematique of Airs, with Variations by Gelinek’; Cock’s & Co’s ‘Catalogue Thematique of the Beauties of Hummel for the Piano Forte’; Goulding & D’Almaine’s ‘A Catalogue of the Commencing Bars of a Selection of the most popular Vocal Duets’; Hodson’s ‘Catalogue Thematique, of Symphonies, Overtures, by Mozart, Haydn, Rossini, Pleyel & c. Arranged with Accompaniments for Flute, Violin and Violoncello, by S. F. Rimbault’.

III: 44-49) is a set of six string quartets which was published as Op. 44 by Forster with the plate number 76.

The imprint on the catalogue has only the name of W. Forster (the elder), which suggests a date of impression between early 1785 and early 1786. William Forster’s partnership with his son began later in 1786 (with a change of imprint to W. Forster & Son), but as some Forster editions issued under the partnership also have the imprint “Wm. Forster,” this imprint alone cannot be a conclusive guide for dating. The publication date assigned to it in the Bodleian Library Catalogue is somewhat later, c. 1790, with the note that this is a reissue of Forster’s first English edition of 1782. Furthermore, two works which are listed in the catalogue – Overture to the Passion of our Saviour (Hob. XX/1) and the quartets Op. 44 (Op. 50, Hob. III 44-49) – could not have been published until well into 1787. Forster received the manuscript of “Passion” from Haydn on 16 July 1787, and the quartets on 5 October 1787. From the evidence – the date of composition given by Hoboken, and the works listed in the catalogue – this catalogue could not have been issued much before the end of 1787 at the earliest. As pointed out in the previous chapter, the single-composer catalogue on the popularity of a composer at any given time and Forster’s Haydn catalogue marked the status of Haydn.

John Bland (b. 1750) seems the next London music publisher to have issued thematic catalogues. He published five catalogues between 1790 and 1795: ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Italian Songs, & c’ (BlJ 10a and 10b), ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginning of 2 Periodical Works for Harpsichord or Piano Forte’ (BlJ 13a and 13b), which was later continued as ‘Index to 48 Nos. of Bland's Harpsichord Collection without Accompaniments’, (BlJ 13c and 13d), and as ‘Index to Le tout Ensemble, Sonatas with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte & Index to the Duets for two Performers on One Piano Forte by the following eminent Masters’ (BlJ 16a to 16c), ‘Theme Catalogue of French Songs’ (BlJ 15), and ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Bland’s Collection of Divine Music’ (BlJ 17).

That Bland was well aware of the advantage offered by thematic catalogues, is shown by the following advertisement which appeared in his title catalogue issued on 25 June 1790 (BlJ 8):

N.B. In the course of the summer will be published the Public’s Guide; or a Catalogue with subjects, or themes, of all the several musical Works engraved and sold by J. Bland, … By referring to this Catalogue, it will prevent any one having the same music twice over, the 1st bars of each work, with their titles, & c. appearing under their several heads; being the first thing of the kind ever done here.\(^\text{12}\)

\(^{12}\) 25 June 1790 (BlJ 8.) Bland’s original intention to issue the three catalogues was not carried out. All his thematic catalogues were based on works included in No. 2 (Page 2.) and No. 3 (Page 3.) title catalogues.
Bland points out the foremost advantage of an incipit: that it precisely identifies one particular work in a catalogue which might contain multiple entries in the same genre or medium category. He was probably well aware of the principal defect of title catalogues – that they frequently contained unspecific and thus often unidentifiable entries. For example, Joseph Dale’s title catalogue, ‘Music Printed at Dale’s Musical Library’ (DJ 4a to 4l), has the following unidentifiable titles in the category ‘Single Lessons & c.’: Cramer’s Concerto, Edelman’s Sonata; while a Pot poury and a Medley of Scots & Irish Airs lack the name of the composer or arranger. Similarly, Broderip & Wilkinson’s ‘No. 1. A Catalogue of Music of the most esteemed Authors,’ (Catalogue Plate 6-2) issued in c. 1803 lists a mysterious ‘Staes, each 7s.6d’ and a ‘Vento, each 10s. 6d’ under the category, ‘Piano Forte’. Even James Balls’ ‘New Piano-Forte Music, just published’ (BJ 3), although issued at a much later date (c. 1829), shows little improvement in this respect. Under ‘Rondos, Airs with Variations’, there is a ‘Rondo [by] Hook, [price] 1s. 6d’ followed by ‘Ditto [by] Forster, 1s. 6d’ and ‘Ditto, [by] Gambold 2s. 0d.’ Likewise, under ‘Marches’, ‘The Tyrolese 1s. 6d’, ‘Two Favourites 1s. 0d’ and ‘The Sicilian 1s. 0d’ lack the names of composers.

‘No. 1. A Catalogue of Music of the most esteemed Authors.’ (BrW 2, c. 1803)
While abbreviated or inadequate titles are found frequently in thematic catalogues as well, the unique quality of the incipit guarantees accurate identification of works. For this reason, publishers could use even more abbreviated wording in thematic catalogues. A comparison of Bland’s title catalogue ‘(Page 2) Catalogue of Harpsichord Music’ (BIJ 9e to 9g, c. 1792-93) with his thematic catalogue ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of 2 Periodical Works…’ (BIJ 13a and 13b, c. 1792) offers numerous examples (see Catalogue Plate 6-3). In the title catalogue, the first number in Bland’s periodical harpsichord collection reads ‘Garth’s 1st Son[ata]. Op. 2,’ but the same work in the thematic catalogue appears as ‘Garth’s Sonata’; similarly No. 3, ‘Haydn’s 3rd Son[ata], Op. 17’ is given as ‘Haydn’s 3d Sonata’; No. 4, ‘Rosetti’s Rom[an] & Rondo’ and as ‘Rosetti’s Romance’; No. 6, ‘Haydn’s 1st Son[ata] [Op.] 17,’ appears as ‘Haydn’s Sonata’. Bland clearly took the advantage of the incipit as an identification tool, avoiding the need for more specific descriptions for the works listed.

13 Brook, “A Tale of Thematic Catalogues,” 408.
Bland’s claim that his catalogue with subjects was “the first thing of the kind ever done here” can be partially justified by the fact that he was the first to use the term “Theme Catalogue,” the English equivalent of the French “Catalogue thématique” originating with Amsterdam music publishers, J. J. and B. Hummel, in 1768. Furthermore, Bland used this type of catalogue most extensively among London music publishers in the period of this study. Of the 35 different thematic catalogues seen by the author issued by London publishing firms from 1780 to 1837, five were brought out by Bland. In addition, four (marked * in Table 1) of these five were continued to the turn of the century by other publishers, effectively raising Bland’s contribution to nine.

Lewis, Houston & Hyde succeeded Bland in 1795 but advertised their business for sale, with stock consisting of 12,000 engraved plates, in The Times of 30 March 1797. Francis Linley, their successor, was in business for only six months before being declared bankrupt in August and advertising his stock-in-trade in The Times on Wednesday 23 August and Wednesday 20 September 1797.

‘The Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Italian Songs & c.’ issued by Lewis, Houston & Hyde (LHH 2, Catalogue Plate 4-5) is a slightly later version of that published by Bland (BIJ 10a [Catalogue Plate 4-4] and 10b). Their catalogue was printed from Bland’s plate, with seven new entries occupying the staves left blank in the earlier version (BIJ 10b) so that titles inherited from Bland stand alongside the firm’s own additions. Francis Linley’s ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Bland’s Collection of Divine Music’ (LiF 1) continues Bland’s thematic catalogue of the same title. He reprinted Bland’s catalogue in 1797, without any change to the contents. The publisher’s imprint has been altered to ‘Printed & Sold by F. Linley, Successor to Mr. Bland, No. 45, Holborn’; the title of the collection has been modified to ‘Linley’s Continuation of Bland’s Collection of Divine Music’ but only on the music items which contain the catalogue.

George Goulding issued a thematic catalogue, ‘Index to Le tout Ensemble, Sonatas with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte by the following eminent Masters’ (GG 4, Catalogue Plate 4-7) around 1798. He probably had purchased the plates and unsold prints of this collection at the sales either in March or September, 1797. Goulding re-engraved the catalogue, however, and added eleven further titles to what seems to have been the last version (BIJ 16c) of Bland’s catalogue. His 17 “Capital Music Stock: To Music-Sellers, Publishers, and the Public,” The Times, Wednesday 20 September 1797. See also Chapter 4, p. [insert later].

18 The author has not been able to locate a version of Bland’s catalogue with any of the 12 prepared staves occupied. Bland’s catalogue ‘Index to Le tout Ensemble, Sonatas with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte & Index to the Duettos for two Performers on One Piano Forte by the following eminent Masters’ contains Nos. 1 catalogue contains 48 works and 12 prepared staves. The titles and pricings of the first 37 numbers are identical to those items listed in Bland’s catalogue of the same title issued c. 1792. The ongoing pagination for these 37 numbers in the collection, placed to the right of each stave, also matches Bland’s.

Evidence within title catalogues and music prints issued by Linley and Robert Birchall suggests that the latter acquired some of Bland’s music prints and catalogues via Linley. Birchall reprinted Bland’s catalogue ‘Index to 48 Nos. of Bland’s Harpsichord Collection without Accompaniments,’ (BIJ 13d) in 1800. With the reissue (BR 7), Birchall punched out Bland’s title and imprint:

‘INDEX to 48 Nos. of BLAND’S Harpsichord Collection without Accomps. / Each No. containing 10 Pages Price 1.6d. & Published the 1st. Day of every Month by J. Bland No. 45 Holborn London.’

and inserted a new title and imprint, and also increased the price of each item to 2s.0d.:

‘INDEX to Bland’s (continued by Rt. Birchall) Harpsichord Collection without Accomps. / Each No. containing 10 Pages Price 2s. & Published by Him No. 133 New Bond Street.’

The contents remain identical to the last state of Bland’s catalogue; Birchall made no alterations or additions to the 48 numbers of the collection.

III. THEMATIC CATALOGUES 1800-1830: THE FOCUS ON A SINGLE ENTITY

If the thematic catalogues issued by Bland reflect the change from umbrella catalogues to medium-oriented catalogues taking place among title catalogues in the late 1790s, the thematic catalogues of the early nineteenth century even more closely mirror the emergence of the precisely-focussed single-entity catalogues which came to dominate catalogue production after 1800. Whether they were of the single-medium, composer, or genre type, thematic catalogues, post-1805 epitomize the new thrust of catalogue organisation as well as publishers’ close perception of quickly-changing tastes, favoured composers and genres. Arguably, these catalogues, though few in number, may be the jewels of all catalogue production in the period of this study. They may be the most intense representation of the interaction between publisher and contemporary society.

19 Humphries and Smith name William Hodsoll as Linley’s successor, but from the above evidence, we can infer with a degree of confidence that Hodsoll was not the only purchaser of Linley’s stock-in-trade.

III. THEMATIC CATALOGUES 1800-1830 – I) SINGLE-COMPOSER, MULTI-GENRE: CATALOGUES OF BEETHOVEN, MOZART AND HUMMEL

The two thematic catalogues issued by the publishing firm of Monzani are remarkable for their single composer emphasis. They were devoted to Mozart and Beethoven respectively. Monzani’s Mozart catalogue, ‘Catalogue Thematique of Mozart's Works for the Piano Forte Consisting of Sonatas, Duets, Trios, Quartetts, Concertos, Airs with Variations, & c’ (MT 4) has been seen in three states. Two early states were issued by Theobald Monzani, c. 1805-07. The last state has the imprint of the Monzani & Hill partnership which commenced in 1807. The earliest state of the catalogue (MT 4a, c. 1805) contains nos. 1 to 47; the second state (MT 4b), containing nos. 1 to 52 is found within Mozart’s Grand Concerto for the pianoforte, no. 3. (K. 595; no. 47 in the catalogue), printed on paper watermarked 1807. The last state (MT 4c) containing nos. 1 to 63, is found within No. 20 of the series, ‘Lison dormoit with Variations.’ The British Library catalogue dates this publication c. 1805 as it has the imprint of Theobald Monzani. However, the imprint on the catalogue is that of Monzani & Hill, suggesting that the source item should be considered a reissue and dated not before 1807.\textsuperscript{20}

Monzani’s Beethoven catalogue (MT 15a to 15c) has been seen in three states, each with the imprint of Monzani & Hill. All incipits have keyboard scoring (treble and bass clefs) as in the Mozart catalogue. The earliest state of the ‘Catalogue Thematique of L.V. Beethoven’s Works for the Piano Forte, consisting of Airs with Variations, Sonatas, Duetts, Trios, Quartetts, Concertos, & c. & c.’ (MT 15a, c. 1820) contains 65 entries; the second state (MT 15b) also dated c. 1820 contains 66 entries. The last state (MT 15c), substantially expanded to 75 items, was issued c. 1825. It is noteworthy that all catalogues are for pianoforte music, with or without accompaniments, across a range of genres, the most lucrative items in music publishers’ catalogues.

These two catalogues seem to have been designed with expansion in mind. In each case, the earlier states were already printed on two folio pages with prepared staves in place for items that might be added in any later reprinting. The two early states of the Mozart catalogue were printed from the same plates. Each page was divided into three columns, each containing nine keyboard systems; the first state contains ten prepared (blank) staves, five of which are occupied by newly introduced works in the second state. (See Catalogue Plate 6-4.) To accommodate a further 11 items on two folio pages, Monzani & Hill re-engraved the catalogue for the third state and changed the layout to four columns, while retaining the same number of staves in each column. The three states of Monzani & Hill’s Beethoven catalogue were all printed from the same plate; the 11 blank staves in the first state were eventually reduced to one in the third state as the contents expanded.

It is worth remarking that although the firm of Monzani was best known for its publication of flute music, the medium that Monzani promoted in thematic catalogues was music for piano, found in the repertoires of two composers, Mozart and Beethoven.

Thomas Preston also issued thematic catalogues for Mozart (PrJ 9) and Beethoven (PrJ 21), around the same time as those of Monzani. More interestingly, these are the only catalogues in thematic format that Preston issued, and like those of Monzani, Preston’s Beethoven and Mozart catalogues both cover piano forte works with and without accompaniments. The ‘Catalogue Thematique of the Beauties of Mozart’ is printed within No. 2 (K. 564) of \textit{A New Series of Mozart’s Sonatas}. The paper is watermarked 1804, falling within the time-frame of Monzani’s Mozart catalogues, issued c. 1805-07. Likewise, Preston’s ‘Catalogue Thematique of Beethoven’s Works, all of which may be had in Single Pieces or in Sets’ is dated 1823 and falls within the period of the three states of the Beethoven catalogue issued by Monzani & Hill, c. 1820 – c. 1825.

Preston’s Mozart catalogue lists 21 piano works – 12 solo piano sonatas, six airs with variations, and three piano concertos. Nine of these 21 works can be found in Monzani’s Mozart catalogues. The similarity between the two firms’ Beethoven catalogues is even more striking. Preston’s contains 30 numbers, comprising piano trios, piano sonatas, overtures arranged for piano, and airs with variations. Twenty eight of these are among the 65 numbers in Monzani and Hill’s catalogue (first state).

In promoting Beethoven, Preston offered a more specialised catalogue. While both contained music for piano forte solo and chamber music with the piano, Monzani’s catalogue included a more diverse range of music, more freely adapted. Preston’s Beethoven editions are all in Beethoven’s original scoring, except perhaps, the piano forte arrangement of the ‘Overture to Prometheus.’ In contrast, Monzani offered some works by Beethoven in various arrangements alongside others in their original versions. The six trios for the piano, violin and cello, (nos. 37 to 42 in the catalogue) which appear as Op. 60, nos. 1-6 are arrangements of Beethoven’s string quartets, Op. 18. Simrock (Bonn) published Ferdinand Ries’ trio arrangements of Op. 18 as Op. 60, nos. 1-6, in 1806. The piano trios which follow as nos. 43-45 and appear as Beethoven’s Op. 61 in the catalogue are Ries’ arrangements of Beethoven’s three string trios, Op. 9. Simrock had published these as Op. 61, also in 1806. It is highly likely that the nine works (nos. 37 to 45) in Monzani’s catalogue came from Simrock – legitimately or otherwise.

Birchall, Lonsdale & Mills entered into the rivalry between Preston and Monzani with their one and only thematic catalogue, ‘Index to Beethoven’s Rondos and Airs with Variations’ (BLM 1, c. 1822). Fifteen of the nineteen entries in this catalogue match entries in Monzani’s Beethoven catalogue, and four match entries in Preston’s Beethoven catalogue (Table 2, a and b). At 1s.6d to 4s.0d, the prices of items also match Monzani’s and Preston’s. Fourteen items (74% of the contents) come from Beethoven’s ‘lesser keyboard publications,’ which the composer issued without opus numbers (WoO 40, 45, 46, 57, 66, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77). Thirteen such works also are in the first state of Monzani’s Beethoven catalogue, and there is an overlap of 11 works (see Table 2, b). Preston, however, offered only five of the ‘lesser keyboard publications’ and it might be hazarded that his rather austere selection of Beethoven works was aimed at the connoisseur, while the Nevertheless, the substantial overlap of contents between the Beethoven catalogues of the three firms makes it apparent that they were competing for essentially the same market, promoting the same composer through many of the same works, at the same time. It is worth reinforcing that the Mozart and Beethoven catalogues were the only thematic catalogues issued by both Preston and Monzani & Hill; while Birchall, Lonsdale and Mill published no other thematic catalogues other than one dedicated to Beethoven. It is therefore probable that all three publishers’ preference for thematic format can be attributed to competition among the three firms. Irrespective of which firm first issued its catalogue, rivalry would have driven the others to respond with catalogues of the same format. This coincidence of time, content and price converts thematic catalogues into a major and powerful weapon for dominance in the marketplace.

This power helps us understand the more complex case of the Gelinek catalogues. Curious to us today, yet perhaps symptomatic of contemporary popular taste, is the attention paid to the piano works of Josef Gelinek (1758-1825). Thematic catalogues of Gelinek’s Airs with Variations were issued in London by four different publishers – Robert Birchall, Clementi & Co., Henry Falkner, and Samuel Chappell. Birchall published his two catalogues under the titles ‘Index to Gelinek’s Airs with Variations’ containing nos. 1 to 27 (BR 16a, Catalogue Plate 6-5), and ‘Gelinek’s Airs with Variations’ containing nos. 28 to 47 (BR 16b); Chappell & Co, followed with an identical catalogue title ‘Gelinek’s Airs with Variations’ containing nos. 1 to 30 (CS 3); Clementi & Co. issued theirs as ‘Table Thematique of Airs, With Variations by Gelinek’ (CM 4, Catalogue Plate 6-6) containing nos. 1 to 36, a title then borrowed by Falkner ‘Table Thematique of Airs, with Variations, by Gelinek’ (FH 2) likewise containing nos. 1 to 36. Birchall’s publications of the compositions themselves date between 1810 and 1820, with watermark dates 1811, 1812, 1813, and 1817; Clementi’s extant publications have watermark dates 1811, 1814, 1815, 1822 and 1824; Falkner’s publications are dated around 1814 to 1817; Chappell’s are dated between 1811 and 1820, with watermark dates 1812, 1814, 1823. Although some of these watermark dates must signal re-issues, by and large, the accompanying catalogues issued by these four publishers may all be dated to around 1815-1824.

The layout and engraving style of the catalogues make it clear that each catalogue is an independent production; there is no re-use of the same plates across the publishers. Birchall’s pair has three columns with nine keyboard systems in each, providing 27 items on a single folio sheet (Catalogue Plate 6-5). Clementi’s (Catalogue Plate 6-6), Falkner’s and Chappell’s catalogues each have four columns with nine systems per column, allowing 36 numbers to be accommodated on a single sheet. Individual numbers are priced at 2s, 2s. 6d, and 3s.0d; in most cases, all publishers set the same price for the same item. It is not only the prices of items that are identical, the items themselves and their numbering are the same across all catalogues. This coincidence of item, order and price among four publishers suggests considerable piracy. Our concern, however, is to emphasize that this almost simultaneous appearance of four nearly identical thematic catalogues underlines the format’s importance in publishers’ eyes as best promoting both the standing of Gelinek, as perhaps the most admired composer of popular music at the time, and the immense popularity of the variations form for 27 All catalogues have been found within the music publications of Gelinek’s airs with variations.

28 In the case of BR 16b, seven systems are left blank; six are blank in CS 3.
29 Gelinek wrote 120 airs with variations. The London publishers (possibly excepting Birchall) did not explore this repertoire but seem to have been content merely to ensure no one publisher cornered the market. Milan Postolka, “Gelinek, Josef,” in The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, ed. Stanley Sadie (London: Macmillan, 2001), vol. 9, p. 636.
piano. Above all, these catalogues further illustrate the suitability of the thematic format to promote the single composer and confirm the 1820s as the heyday of the single-composer catalogue.

To illustrate further the particular suitability of the thematic catalogue to promote the genre or composer immediately fashionable, we can consider the two catalogues produced by another large London music publisher. Goulding & Co. entered the airs and variations market with thematic catalogues of the works of Joseph Fredrick Kirmair (c. 1770-1814) and Joseph Mazzinghi. ‘Kirmair’s Airs with Variations’ in two states (GG 9a and 9b, c. 1815 and 1821) and ‘Theme Index to Mazzinghi’s Airs &c. for the Piano-Forte, Harp, Flute and Violoncello or Piano-Forte and Flute’ (GG 10, c. 1820, Catalogue Plate 6-7) are two of only five thematic catalogues issued by Goulding for the period concerned.

Kirmair was a contemporary of Gelinek; the subjects of his variations are similarly taken from the popular operas and airs of the day. The layout of Goulding’s catalogue is identical to Birchall’s Gelinek catalogue – three columns with nine keyboard systems in each, accommodating 27 items on a folio sheet. (See Catalogue Plate 6-7.) The prices of items are competitive and Goulding may have produced this catalogue deliberately to rival those devoted to Gelinek. Mazzinghi had a special connection with the firm, however. Many publications of his music have the Goulding & Co imprint and the fashionable London-based pianist seems virtually a house composer. The firm devoted an ongoing title catalogue to the composer, ‘A Complete Catalogue of the Works of Joseph Mazzinghi,’ (c. 1800-03, GG 5) which went through seven states as his output grew. The “Theme index” though, is as much about a genre as a composer. Kirmair was put against Gelinek; the chamber scoring of Mazzinghi’s airs and variations was to bring that genre to a wider market. Both these catalogues appeared at the height of the publishing frenzy of airs and variations and the choice of the thematic format can be seen as a shrewd commercial response. Competition from other publishers was best met on their own grounds.

30 The seven states include compositions Opp. 1-37; Opp. 1-38; Opp. 1-39; Opp. 1-41; Opp. 1-42; and Opp. 1-46.
31 That Goulding published some 240 Airs, with Variations by more than 50 composers including 32 by Beethoven and 30 by Gelinek but chose not to issue any other thematic catalogue either of this genre or composer, tends to point to his selection of Kirmair and Mazzinghi as a carefully calculated exploitation of the market situation. William Hodsoll (fl. 1798-1831) took over Linley’s (formerly Bland’s) premises at 45 Holborn, but he appears to have acquired little of the stock-in-trade. Although he made extensive use of thematic catalogues, none was a reissue of Bland / Lewis / Linley’s plates. Rather Hodsoll’s extensive thematic catalogue output concentrated on chamber arrangements of overtures and symphonies popular at the time.

He issued three thematic catalogues (HoW 3, HoW 6 and HoW 7). First came the ‘Catalogue Thematique, of Symphonies and Overtures, by Mozart, Haydn, Rossini, Pleyel, & c. Arranged [for the Piano forte] with Accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello by S. F. Rimbault.’ (HoW 3a to 3h.) This catalogue has been seen in eight expanding states, issued from 1819 to 1827. A slightly different and later catalogue ‘No. 1. Catalogue Thematique, of Symphonies and Overtures, by Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Himmel, Weber & Mehul Arranged with Accompaniments for Flute, Violin and Violoncello, by S. F. Rimbault.’ (HoW 6, see Catalogue Plate 6-8), appeared in c. 1829, and was quickly followed by ‘No. 2 Catalogue Thematique, of Symphonies and overtures, by A. Romberg, Pleyel, Winter, Rossini, Kreutzer, Handel, Päer and Mozart. Arranged with Accompaniments, for Flute, Violin and Violoncello, by S. F. Rimbault’ (HoW 7a and 7b), in late 1829 or early 1830. Most publications of Rimbault’s arrangements of the symphonies and overtures contain one of the three catalogues. Usually the catalogue is on the verso of the last leaf of the piano part; in a couple of cases, it is printed on the recto of the second leaf of the piano forte part.

Hodsoll’s thematic catalogues are well worth noting for their genre and medium—symphonies in ‘chamber’ arrangements. These were all done by Stephen Francis Rimbault (1773-1837), who probably was Hodsoll’s in-house arranger. Arrangements of symphonies and overtures abound in late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century music publishers’ title catalogues, and the piano, the ubiquitous and versatile instrument of the nineteenth-century, was best suited for transcriptions of orchestral genres. That Rimbault’s arrangements of symphonies and overtures were the only works Hodsoll promoted with thematic catalogues, suggests that the publisher deliberately reserved this format for the most commercially viable publications of the firm. From the numerous surviving copies of these thematic catalogues compared to Hodsoll’s title catalogues, we may conclude that they were printed in large quantities, and widely circulated to catch an ever-expanding market.

34 BL h. 276. contains 26 of these arrangements. Hodsoll’s thematic catalogues are found in all 26 items.
Zenas Trivett Purday succeeded Hodsoll in 1831, taking over Hodsoll’s premises and stock at 45 High Holborn.\textsuperscript{36} He issued a single thematic catalogue of Symphonies and Overtures (PZ 3) which was a re-engraved version of Hodsoll's ‘No. 2’ catalogue (HoW 7a and 7b). Purday retained the three-column layout as well as the 30 publications listed in the Hodsoll catalogue but extended the line of composers to include Boieldieu, Hook, Weigl, Auber and Herold. Purday dropped all nine overtures by Mozart offered by Hodsoll, replacing them with six by his ‘new’ composers and three by composers (Romberg, Pleyel and Winter) already in Hodsoll's catalogue (HoW 7). This somewhat (to us) radical move may indicate a waning of Mozart's importance in the London musical scene, or even reflect a move in popular taste from a classical to a more light-weight, romantic musical style. Despite these changes, Purday retained Hodsoll's pricing of items, as well as the services of Rimbault as the in-house arranger to the firm.

\textbf{CONCLUSION}

If thematic catalogues were considered more efficient than their non-thematic counterparts, it may be asked why they represent barely five percent of the entire output of sale catalogues issued by London music publishers in the period under review. The main drawback of the thematic catalogue is that an incipit takes up more space than text and with engraving being more labour intensive, it is more costly to produce. Its economic return is best where it can be quite specifically targeted, and across the half-century we have just reviewed, we have seen publishers using thematic catalogues to promote ever more closely-defined repertoires of individual composers. Even the eighteenth-century catalogues of John Bland were relatively specifically by medium, but the single-composer, single-genre, single-medium thematic catalogues were nineteenth-century innovations, immediate and very ‘contemporary’ responses to increasingly complex demands from an increasingly complex market. It is this that sets London publishers apart from their continental counterparts. They avoided the thematic format for large multi-genre and multi-composer catalogues. There is no equivalent of the Breitkopf thematic catalogue with its almost 1500 incipits, representing works by more than 1000 composers, which was issued in six parts and sixteen supplements over a period of twenty five years.\textsuperscript{37}

The convention practised by London music publishers can be summarized as follows: thematic catalogues were either devoted to a single composer, or to a single genre and instrumentation. In vocal music, they were usually used for vocal French or Italian songs, or for duets, but seldom for a mix of different kinds. They were invariably printed within a music item, and like title catalogues utilized the blank pages. Even within such confines coverage varied considerably. As we have seen, incipits in two-stave systems allowed for some 21 to 36 items per folio page. The most densely printed example of a thematic catalogue is probably Bland’s single leaf ‘Catalogue of Subjects or Beginnings of Italian Songs, & c.’ (BJ 10) which contains 100 single-stave incipits packed into four columns. When fairly closely-printed title catalogues list around 300 items on a single sheet, it becomes obvious why so many publishers preferred title format over thematic catalogues.

Notwithstanding this disadvantage, thematic catalogues as a group reveal the shrewdness of London music publishers of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries as entrepreneurs, who knew which kinds of music and which composers were best suited to, or most effectively promoted in thematic form. As such, these catalogues are valuable documents of the changing taste and the changing social milieu in which music was performed. Their usefulness is compounded in the study of music itself of this period; not only can they provide evidence of compositions no longer extant, or even unknown, but thanks to the presence of incipit, they can provide positive identification and remove much conjecture from the murky area of (mis)attribution.

INTRODUCTION

This Bibliography has been constructed from the extensive database which besides containing details of the catalogues themselves also contains the titles of the individual items in each catalogue amounting to 201,000 entries. These can be searched by composer, by title of composition, and by publications per publisher.

Layout of individual entries is as follows.
1. Catalogue code

1. Catalogue code

Each publisher is assigned an identification code formed by combining the first letter of the publisher’s surname (in most cases) and that of the first name: DJ for Joseph Dale and CS for Samuel Chappell. Numbers following this abbreviation give the chronological order of catalogues within a publisher’s output. Different states of a catalogue are indicated by the letters following the number (a=first state, b=second state, etc.). The first state of Dale’s first catalogue is given as ‘DJ 1a’. Only the first states determine the chronological sequence of a publisher’s catalogues; 1a is earlier than 2a, but 1b (second state) may have been issued later than 2a.

States: After the first issue of a catalogue, any changes made to the contents of a catalogue including a change of imprints constitute a new state of that catalogue. The title of the catalogue remains unchanged.
2. Title
A full transcription of the original title is given for each catalogue, with the vertical stroke indicating line breaks in the original. Spellings, capitalizations, punctuations, and italics are exact transcriptions, usually including publishers’ imprints. A transcription is not repeated for subsequent states if the title is unchanged. Publishers’ imprints if not given in the catalogue, are taken from the title pages of source items.

3. Dates
Dates assigned to catalogues are based on the entry dates in the Stationers’ Hall registers for the source items containing the catalogues as well as on the entry dates of the “new” items included in later “states” of a catalogue. For some catalogues dates are based on the source music plate numbers as well as plate numbers of items listed in catalogues themselves.

These are supplemented by dates of advertisement containing items in the catalogues inserted in The Times and by dates of reviews of publication reviews in The Monthly Magazine, The Harmonicon and Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review. These appear under “Commentary”.

6. Process
This refers to the printing method employed in the catalogue production.

7. Layout
i) Page layout
This gives the number of columns in a catalogue.

ii) Categories and sub-categories
These are headings by which a publisher arranged or organized items in a catalogue. Spellings, such as “Quartetts”, “Duetts”, have been kept unchanged.

8. Extent
This refers to the number of items in a catalogue; items have been noted “each” for instance, “3 books, each 5s.” they are counted as three separate entries.

9. Commentary
This section lists relevant materials which assist with dating the catalogue, and identifying its various states. Occasionally, specific items and their plate numbers (and watermark dates) are listed without reference to publication announcements or reviews. Eventually, they may become additional clues for “new entries” dating.

A particular work may appear in more than one catalogue issued by a publisher. In such cases, entry dates in Stationers’ Hall registers, publication announcements and reviews are listed only for the catalogue which contains the first appearance of the item.

10. Within
This section gives details of those music items which contain the catalogue; holding library call numbers and the placement of catalogues (verso title page, or leaf ii recto) in music publications are given. Watermark dates and publishers’ plate numbers, and Stationers’ Hall entry dates of source items are also supplied.

Commentary:
  Dated Catalogue. Under the publisher’s imprint. Bland advertised:
  Advertisements. June 25, 1790.
  The Public will be pleased to take notice, that it has been a common Practice with many Publishers an Music-Shops to answer the several Enquirers for Bland’s Edition, or Works from his Catalogue, that they are out of print. In order to prevent the like imposition, the Publisher respectfully informs the generous Public, which has so singularly patronized his correct and cheap Works, that no one Work shall ever remain one Day of out print; that all Orders he may have the Honour to receive shall be executed with the greatest Dispatch possible; and that in a Journey of more than 400 Miles in Germany, &c. (last Year) he personally settled a Connexion with Haydn, Hoffmeister, Mozart, Kozeluch, Paradies, Vanhal, and many others, whose Works will come out with all possible Expedition: And they may be assured all the new Works will be original, and published for such instruments, &c. for.
  N.B. In the course of the summer will be published the Public’s Guide; or a Catalogue with subjects, or themes, of all the several musical Works engraved and sold by J. Bland, in three parts, viz. No. 1, Instrumental Music; No. 2, Harpsichord ditto; and No. 3, Vocal ditto; Price each 6d. – By referring to this Catalogue, it will prevent any one having the same music twice over, the 1st bars of each work, with their titles, &c. appearing under their several heads; being the first thing of the kind ever done here.

- This second state was used for over 10 years, from c. 1785 to c. 1798, without being updated; music at CAM MR290. a. 75. 16. (1.) Twelve Songs, set to music by J. Gerard, c. 1783, is probably the later issue of 1783 edition, thus should be assigned later date.
